push his fortune. He was engaged a correspondence clerk by an influential firm, in whose service he worked himself up to such a point of efficiency that they increased both his pay and his responsibilities. In order to cover his personal extravagance the young man helped himself to his employers' cash to the extent of £3,000. He, of course, cleared out and all the ingenuity of the detective officials could not disclose his whereabouts. In the meantime the fugitive went to America, and six months afterwards transpired engaged himself to he married the wealthy young widow of one of the Federal generals who was killed at Gettysburg. After their marriage the lady wished to visit England, but there was one difficulty in the way—the £3000! Unfortunately, however, that the wisest course would be to refund the amount, and to the delight of the Liverpool firm they received by the last steamer an order for the amount, with five per cent interest from the date of the cashier's elopement.

introduce an amount of strife and discord which could end only in war. It is our fate to be united with a people the majority of whom are wholly different in sentiment and sympathy from ourselves. What they prize we do not care for. What the greater number of them regard with indifference, we regard with respect. They are imaginative, reverential, and loyal. We are positive, practical, commercial. We give them a Church in which discord* all appeals to the faculty of imagination and the feeling of obedience; we

The "Economist" says that if Mr. Bright will bring in a bill making land in Ireland available for purchase, the Government will watch, Englishmen will consider it, and money will be forthcoming. The Government will pass it, and watch the result with exceeding interest. Or if he will devise some scheme to enable the tenant to purchase the land, to compensate his landlord for the loss of his rent, the Government will not only consent to claim to evict at will, he will have a most attentive hearing; but politicians must be practical, and it is of no use to propose an English bill to the House of Commons, or to the English Parliament either the compulsory transfer of land from John to Thomas, or the grant of a leasehold to John, or the purchase of the land by Thomas to enable him to buy the land of John, or the needless interference of the State in a land bargain which Thomas and John are competent to settle in any law court.

seizure, except under the law of contraband or the attempt to break a blockade.

Were such a principle generally admitted, it is evident that the use of such vessels as the "Alabama," would be at an end; and though it does not follow that new and revolutionary powers would necessarily accept a principle so embarrassing to them, yet the gradual accession to it of the greater naval Powers could not but exercise a great pressure even upon the new candidates for independence,—those more so as such cruises as those of the "Alabama" and "Shenandoah" have been

If this great concession to the neutral Powers be made, we can well afford to pay with good grace for depredations for which most probably we were not legally responsible, but which, by the exercise of a little more care and providence, we could certainly have prevented.

policy was "obstinately retrospective." We have now no Spanish policy; retrospective or otherwise. If there is any obstinacy about us reference to Spain; it will probably consist absolutely looking in another direction when

The Rev. A. R. Bonar, of Congregational Church, Edinburgh, is about to publish an enlarged edition of the "Poets and Poetry of Scotland, from James the First to the Present Time, with Biographical Sketches of the Authors."

At a banquet was given at Boston on Tuesday evening to Mr. Malcolm, the Conservative member for that borough. Mr. Malcolm, in returning thanks for the toast of his health, said:

to the attempt which some people make to separate religion and secular education, as there were some kind of knowledge of the earth, earthly, and another kind of knowledge of the heaven, heavenly. Of course to be so, it must be founded upon, and it must embrace, those principles for the teaching of which religion has been established among men. It must be founded on true views of man, his nature, as his Creator. It must be consistent to the children right ideas of God, their Maker, as of themselves. Sir Rowland seems to agree rather with Mr. Davy-port Brounley that boys so far from being born good, are natural rogues worse than men. "Some say," he said.

Tuan was announced in our second edition yesterday, is the brother of the Earl of Bandon, and Rector of Kibrogan, in the Diocese of Cork. Mr. Bernard is fifty five years of age, and is extremely popular with both clergy and laity in Ireland. He is known as an intelligent parish clergyman, and a prudent supporter of missionary societies. He has been the benefice of Kibrogan which is worth something over £400 a year, and is the gift of the Bishop, since 1842. The new Bishop of Tuam is a sympathizer with the Church.

—The tarponners of New York claim a full hour for dinner, and quit work at 4 o'clock on Saturdays.

One evening M—— received at his house a friend, to whom he paid a large sum. His son was present, and the three dined together. At ten o'clock the visitor retired, and although he had to traverse the wood of Boulogne to reach his house, started alone one on foot. He confided also in his pistols which he always carried at night. In the most solitary part of the road his steps were arrested by a man with blacked face, who presented a pistol to his head, and, demanded in the old-fashioned way, the money or life of the victim. The latter at first resolved to part with neither without a struggle; but a gleam of recognition suddenly flashed upon him. His resistance was made. Without a word he gave the robber his money, and, after waiting till the latter had disappeared in the woods pursued his way.

half concealed beneath the pillow, was seized by the stolen purse. Seizing the pistol that rested on the table, the wretched father before his friend could divine his purpose, discharged its contents at the head of his boy.

Monsieur M—— delivered himself immediately into the hands of justice, and was sentenced to transportation for life. After serving ten years of his sentence he was pardoned and returned to Paris, where until his death he lived in complete isolation from the world.
