All this and much more Theodore An this and much more Theodore planned to tell the bishop, and, as he thought about it, it seemed as if he could not wait another hour, so intense was his longing to look once more into the face that was like no other earthly face to him, to listen again to the voice that thrilled his heart, and hear it say, "My boy, I forgive you." Many a time he dreamt of this and started up from forgive you." Many a time he dreamt of this and started up from sleep with those words ringing in his ears, "My boy, I forgive you," and then finding himself alone in his dark, dismal little room, he would bury his wet cheeks in the pillow and try to stifle the longing in his lonely, boyish heart. Even Nan, who knew him better than did any one else, never guessed how his heart hungered to hear those words from the lips of the bishop. But little by little—in nickels and dimes and quarters—Theodore laid by another five dollars. He knew to a penny how much there was, but when he brought the last dime, he and Nan counted it all to make sure. There was no mistake. It amounted to thirty-seven dollars and twenty-five cents, and the boy drew a long, glad breath as he looked up at Nan with shining eyes and flushed cheeks, saying. saying,

"To-morrow, Nan, I can see—him!" "Don't look so—so awfully glad, Theo. I'm afraid something will happen," said Nan, with a troubled expression in her eyes as she looked at him.

Then he glanced at his worn suit and tried to pull down his jacket sleeves, as he added, wistfully, "D'you think I look well enough to go there, Nan? I wanted to buy a collar an' necktie, but, I just couldn't wait any longer." Nan's private opinion was, that if the bishop could only see Theo's face at that moment, the garments he wore would be a matter of small im-portance. She answered quickly,

He had exchanged a sandwich and two doughnuts for that "shine." "You look well enough, Theo," Nan said, "plenty well enough. Now go on, and oh, I do hope it will be all right."

"I know 'twill," cried the boy, joy-ously, as he tucked the money care-fully into an inside pocket. "Oh, Nan!"

He looked at her with such a happy face that her own beamed a bright response. Then he ran off, and Nan stood in the doorway watching him

Greatest Rule of Health

And How it May be Carried Out with Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pille.

You sometimes hear it said that the most important Rule of Health is "Daily movement of the bowels." Constipation begins with the bowels, but it does not end there.

but it does not end there. You must also consider the way it affects the liver, the kidneys, the digestive system, and, in fact, the whole human body. Headaches, backaches, aching limbs, indigestion, biliousness kidney de-rangements, appendicitis, and the most serious diseases imaginable often have their beginning with con-stipation of the bowels. There is one treatment which has a direct and combined action on the bowels, the liver and the kidneys, and gets these organs into good

About a year ago I started using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and have found them to be the best medicine for constipation that I have ever used. I would strongly advise anyone troubled with this complaint to try the same remedy." remedy."

To-day, however, when he went to Nan's room for his money, she offered him the use of her comb, and helped him reduce his rough, thick hair to some kind of order. Even then he looked at himself somewhat doubt-fully. His suit was so shabby in spite of Nan's careful mending, and his shoes were worse than his suit, but
