The spectacle will be presented of Sir Wilfred Laurier and his followers voting with the members for Calgary, whose opposition is the more sweeping and comprehensive.

Mr. Bennett had obviously worked hard in the preparation of his speech had provided himself with a mass of material, had fortified himself with references and had stored his memory with details of Canadian Northern finances to a surprising degree. In his explanation of these finances he fell foul more than once of the Solicitor-General. Hon. Arthur Meighen, whose refutation of the Calgary member's conclusions evoked where it hung beside his leg. For a moment the two stood looking straight into each other's eyes. On Tarzan's face was a pathetic expression of disappointment. On De Coude's a rapidly growing expression of horror

He could endure it no longer. "Shoot, monsieur!" he screamed.

But Tarzan did not raise his pistol. Instead, he advanced toward De Coude, and when D'Arnot and M. Flaubert, misinterpreting his intention, would have rushed between them he raised his left hand in a sign of remonstrance. "Do not fear," he said to them. "I shall not harm him."
