Dodd's Kidney Pills will do for sick and suffering humanity.

Mr. Kernahan had been very il, indeed, so ill that the doctors had given him up as incurable. He had spent a great deal of money in trying to obtain a cure, but all in vain, until at last a friend suggested Dodd's Kidney Pills. The wonderful remedy soon made him a well man, and atthough this was nearly seven years ago, he has scarcely known what diness has been since, and has never had a return of his old trouble. The following letters which he has addressed to the proprietors of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Something About Pullman Car Ser vice and Tips. (Harper's Weekly.)

The truly magnanimous action of the very prosperous Pullman mono-poly in adding twenty-five cents a day to the wages of its conductors is, of course, commendable. The con-ductors are a hard-working lot, and need all they can get for their wives and obtideen they are also doubtless need all they can get for their wives and children; they are also doubtless underpaid. The reason ascribed to the company, however, inspires reflection. It seems that the porters get so much more out of the travelling public in the form of tips than the conductors receive as wages that the management felt that a step towards equalization was in order. Another way would have been to pro-Another way would have been to pro hibit tip-seeking and tip-taking, and to fix both conductors' and porters hibit tip-seeking and tip-taking, and to fix both conductors' and porters' wages accordingly. But this method did not occur to the company, whose lawful prey is the public, which is expected to and does pay twice for a single service. No monopoly in the country practises imposition so thoroughly as the Puliman. Its charges are outrageously high, its old-fashioned berth system wholly antiquated, and its tip necessities a perpetual annoyance. Time was when a porter was satisfied with a quarter from each person on a trip; now he beholds it with pitying scorn. A half-dollar is viewed with amused tolerance, a dollar (in advance) secures the service already doubter secures. dollar is viewed with amused tolerance, a dollar (in advance) secures the service already doubly bought from the company, while a five-dollar note from a John W. lank man with the wandering eye, addressing the three men sitting near him on the upper deck of the Staten Island ferryboat, "this hypnotizing business is getting to be a great thing, isn't it?"

"Not particularly," replied the three men, who wanted to be alone with their thoughts.

"Yes, sir-ee, a great thing, for a fact," went on the long, lank man, disregarding their lack of encouragement. "Dje read about the queer case of that bank cashier out in Iowa?"

queer case of that bank cashier out in Iowa?"
"Yep." answered the three in chorus, hoping thus to stop the long, lank man's flow of conversation. But he wasn't to be stopped.
"It sure was odd, wasn't it?" he proceeded. "But the papers got the details all mixed up. It happened in my home town out in Iowa. The cashier of the bank said he was hypnotized, you know, and robbed while he was that way."
"Sure thing," said the other three gloomlly. "But he might have had a bun on, at that."
"Nope, he wasn't a drinking man

"Nope, he wasn't a drinking man at all," said the long, lank man. "I've known him for thirty years, and he never was a drinking man. The way the thing happened, according to his way of telling it, was this:

A man with a long black beard and a plereing black eye—he particularly noticed the piercing black eye, he said—walked in. He said that that man's eyes seemed to burn a hole clean through his head to the back of his skull, and the idea made him nervous.

"Look a-here, he said to the stranger, at the same time feeling around with his hand for the gun that he knew was in the paying teller's drawer, 'what do you want here, anyhow?"

"Who, me?' said the man with the black beard and the piercing black eye. 'Why, I ma professional money acquirer, and he suddenly stuck his head through the paying teller's window and began to make certain queer passes with his hands in front of the cashier's eyes. 'Now, you, although you have only known me for about seven minutes, are already so pleased with my personality that you are about to bestow upon me all of the paper money in this bank. You know you are. Now, tell me, ain't you?"

"This was the cashier's story. He said that that was the last he remembered of the whole business. He was found 1-ing in a stupor on the bank floor when the rest of the bank folks came back from their lunches, and the $60,000 in paper money was clean gone irom out the safe, which was open, as it had been since the beginning of busines in the morning.

"The cashier was arrested as a matter of form, and perhaps because there weren't any bruises or such like found on him, indicating he had been attacked. He was in a daze for two or three hours after his arrest and then he came to with a snap, like a man emerging from a night-mare.

he was questioned, when he told his

Her Pressing Need. "When Lincoln was President of the United States," he said, "he took a walk down Pennsylvania avenue one cold winter evening. During his stroll he met a poor, forlorn woman, thinly clad, shivering with cold. When she saw the President she mistook him for a minister, and, falling upon her knees, with hands uplifted, begged his blessing, saying that she had three small children at home starving and freezing to death. She said: 'Oh, Mr. Minister, pray to the Lord to help me.'

Every farmer knows that some plants grow better than others. Soil may be the same and seed may seem the same but some plants are weak and others strong.

And that's the way with children. They are like young plants. Same food, same home, same care but some grow big and strong while others stay small and weak.

Scott's Emulsion offers an easy way out of the difficulty. Child weakness often means starvation, not because of lack of food, but because the food does not feed.

Scott's Emulsion really feeds and gives the child growing strength.

Whatever the cause of weakness and failure to grow-Scott's Emulsion seems to find it and set the matter right. Send for free sample.

Pretty Woman's Feet.

There never was a pretty woman who looked calmly bewitching when her feet were twinging and aching. Every night bathe the feet with tepid water with a suggestion of soda added. Tincture of benzoin is equally good. Have your shoes made to order, if you can afford such a jolly luxury, and have several pairs, so the feet can be tested often. Change your hosiery every day. A powder made of one-half pound of pure borax and one-half ounce of soda is comforting to aching feet.

QUESTION OF THE ORIGIN OF SPECIES.

The origin of species is piaced in a new light by the recent remarkable work of Prof. Hugo de Vrics, of Amsterdam. This botanist has been the first investigator to watch the formation and development of new species, and in his observations the forms produced have been a result of sudden change and never of progressive variation. The "single variations" among cull-viated plants suggested looking for the same phenomenon in wfid flowers. Of 100 species studied, the only one showing change was Conothera Lamarchiana, one of the American evening primroses, and of 50,000 descendants of this plant produced in ten years about 800 have been so aftered spontaneously that they are regarded as forming seven new species. These species are mostly very constant, the characteristics of the new parent teing reproduced in successive generations.

Officials of the U. S. war department have read with some amusement an editorial in the Manila American, commenting upon the "warlike condition prevailing in the United States." The paper says: "It is time to call a halt. The civil commission or the střenuous President should get busy. The honorable senator from Texas has taken the hoaorable senator from Indiana by the throat and choked him. The exact details are lacking. Having been so long in this blessed and peaceful and well ruled part of the United States, we don't know what has happened. Steps should be taken to stop these disgraceful insurrections in the United States Senate. The District of Columbia should return to military rule." Jollying Uncle Sam.

During the recent volcanic eruption at Martinique a strange phenomenon was noticed at certain mineral springs near Prague. The water first turned brown and then red, retaining this latter color for a full hour. Scientists are unable to account for this sudden change in the water, but those who reside near the springs are certain that it was caused by the rolcano and do not fail to point out that a similar phenomenon was observed in 1755 on the day when there was a terrible earthquake in Lisbon.

HOW A PERSON IS DROWNED.

t is a Fallacy to Suppose He Rises Thrice to the Surface. It is a very common belief that frowning man must necessarily rise to the surface three times, no more and no less, before he can possibly drown. There is little ground for this supposition, although it has been also most universally believed in for generations. The truth is that a drowning person may sink the first time never to rise again, or he may, as he indeed does in the majority of cases, rise three times before he sinks forever.

ases, rise thi At all depends upon the quantity of water that he swallows when he sinks and the size of his lungs. The human body in life naturally floats while the lungs are inflated. As long as one keeps his head above the surface of the water he can float face up without having to move hand or foot.

up without having to move hand or foot.

But as soon as a person sinks he gulps and imbibes a quantity of water. If after he has swallowed the water he has any air left in his lungs he will undoubtedly rise again and will continue to sink and rise alternately until all the air is expelled from his lungs, when he will drown. In most cases the frightened victim of an accident swallows enough water when he first sinks to leave him in a very exhausted condition, but as there is still air left in his lungs he soon finds himself on the surface again. Each time he sinks, however, the supply of air in his lungs grows less until ultimately there is no longer sufficient to support him,
