Raised Colors on Sunken Wreck.

RED ENSIGN HOISTED HUNDRED FEET BELOW SURFACE.

Victoria, B.C., Dec. 12.—The British flag has been raised under most unusual circumstances in the past, but probably the conditions were never stranger than those of a recent ceremony held at Swanson Bay, where two divers, nearly 100 feet below the surface of the sea, hoisted the ship's ensign on the flagstaff of the sunken Prince Rupert, which is now in process of being salvaged. One diver bent the colors to the halyards and slowly hoisted them, while his mate stood at the salute near by and sent to the surface through the telephone connection with the helmet the strains of the National Anthem.

Two divers of the Pacific Salvage Company had gone down into the stern of the wreck to a depth of nearly 100 feet. The diver's tender suddenly announced that he could hear "God Save the King" coming up through the telephone which connected him with the man below. Wonder was expressed at the occurrence, but the mystery was cleared up when the divers rose to the surface again.

While going around the stern one diver had found in a box at the foot of the flagstaff the ship's ensign. Signalling to his partner he took the emblem from the repository, bent in on the halyards, and slowly hoisted it. Standing at attention, his hand raised to the salute, his mate sang the National Anthem, and it was this that the man at the surface had heard.

Many a fine ship has gone down with colors flying, but to the Pacific Salvage Company will accrue the unique honor of raising a vessel with the British flag mastheaded.

Eagles Are Cowards.

The Golden Eagle, although large, is not courageous. He never makes the smallest attempt to defend his nest and his prey consists of small defenceless animals, like blue hares, new born lambs and ptarmigan. In this connection, a correspondent sends the following story: Climbing up hill on my way home, one day, I ran into the shepherd in charge of the beat. He had a large canvas bag over his shoulder, which shepherds carry on the hill at this time of the year. It had a large rent in it, and round about the rent the canvas was very bloodstained. I casually asked the shepherd how the bag had got into the war, and this was his story, which I have no doubt was perfectly accurate. On the previous day he had been out on the hills soon after daylight. On one of the higher tops he found a dead sheep, with a live lamb; he put the lamb into the bag and laid the bag in a cairn while he went down into the corrie below to see after the sheep there. When he reached the cairn on his return he found the following state of things: there was a large rent in the bag, from which blood was exuding freely; the lamb, still inside the bag, had been torn open and the liver and heart removed. That was the work of the eagle. As he came sailing over the tops his eyes must have caught the bag; probably the unfortunate lamb gave a kick inside, and made the bag move. This caused the eagle to come down for a near inspection. Having satisfied himself what the bag contained, he tore it open and proceeded to break up the lamb.

A City of Night.

Cairo, Egypt, might be called a city of night for it is for the evenings that Carlo lives. During the hot afternoon, its citizens are motionless on lounges, and it is only after sunset that the streets which but a short time before were almost empty, save for listless policemen and beggars sleeping in a patch of shade, become as animated as a Paris boulevard. The pavement tables outside the cafes are thronged. Picturesque sellers of water and sherbet, clashing two large bowls together to attract attention, ply their trade; others sell little nosegays of strongly scented jasmine; and the evening papers are bought eagerly by the awakening population, while birds twitter their vespere hymn. It is on the pavement that the true Cairo prefers to dine and there is one street in particular, filled with nothing but cafes. The perfect evening ends with a sail in a felucca on the romantic Nile, where one takes deep breaths of the cool night air and turns one's face to catch every little breeze that blows.
