Is Our Art of Politics But the Scuffling of Kites and Crows?

"Regarded from one standpoint, the Art of Politics may appear but the 'scuffling of kites and crows.' Regarded from another, it is an effort, miserable and imperfect perhaps, but still an effort, to realize that deep seated instinct of humanity, which bids Man turn for help and guidance to his fellow Man. It is an affirmation, on unmistakable lines, of that social side of our nature, which may fairly be regarded as one of the fundamental facts of the universe. As such it is surely worth earnest and impartial study; and all the dreary and repellent accessories which attend its practice cannot disguise its essential importance. The day may be far distant when the actual political arrangements of the world will realize the highest ideal of which our social instincts are capable. But every life honestly spent in the faithful service of the common weal, every hour devoted to the earnest study of the public good, brings that day more surely within our reach."

No fantastic sentiments these, whatever may be the opinfon of the professional politician, the political wire puller, or the concession seeker, ever ready with his ill-gained wealth to subwert public morals to his purpose. A high ideal perhaps, but we have had many who, having entered public life with ideals as high and motives as pure, have found themselves in an atmosphere of intrigue, and elbowed by individuals who openly flout such high conceptions on the part of a public servant.

Where lies the remedy for this insidious disease? It may come from within, but the treatment from without is far more likely to prove effective. Public opinion, once fully aroused is irresistible, and the signs are not wanting to-day that the people of this country are awakening to the fact that their land is being despoiled and that their hard earned money is being squandered.

In the Legislative Council, on Tuesday, the Hon. Sir Patrick McGrath in plain, outspoken language expressed his opinion of the situation. He referred to the baleful effect of permitting civil servants to receive unauthorized remuneration in addition to their salaries. He gave illustration after illustration of irregularities that had occurred in several departments and that had passed undetected, or had been condoned. He described the loose system of checking that existed particularly in the Controller's Department, and denounced in unmeasured terms the payment of sums of money to the police authorities without the knowledge or approval of the Department of Justice, and in the Auditor General's Department without legal sanction.

We publish the Honourable Member's speech in full in this Issue, and it will repay careful perusal. Daily the list of public extravagances grows longer and more damning, and there is much to come.

Concern for the suffering and hardship of the people has been unctiously preached, and extravagance in every direction has been practiced. Money has been granted for relief, the bulk of which has been squandered in overhead expenses.

At a time when the strictest watch over the public funds is necessary, new loans have been negotiated, new appointments have been made, new legislation has been passed whereby our resources are permitted to be depleted and their wealth passed on to outsiders, the export tax on our iron ore is remitted, under an arrangement which the Prime Minister termed "angling," tenders for supplies are granted to individuals without regard to market prices, and so we might continue ad nauseam.

Is it not time for the public to demand a reckoning? What time was ever more opportune for the use of the ditional term of three months each local competition, were manufactured Geddes' Axe?

Do those who were party to the laxity of administration, under which the above misgovernment took place, imagine that such will be permitted indefinitely?

Let them see to it now that the remedy comes from within for so surely as "Man turns for help and guidance to his fellow Man." so will he demand of his tribune a reckoning when he realizes that his trust has been betrayed.

DEVALERA'S CAPTURE PRESENTS NEW DIFFICULTIES.

LONDON, Aug. 16. The Press wastes no sympathy on the Republican leader on his loss of his captors for they are regarded as ter. having set for themselves problems the solution of which may cost them dearly. Opinion here is that De Valera was less dangerous to the Free State as a fugitive than as a prisoner. "We don't envy the Irish Government its problem and we are glad it is not ours," is the tenor of several newspaper editorials.
