Archbishop Walch at St. Peter's.

In St. Peter's Cathedral Sunday evening, Archbishop Walsh, of Torouto, preached a charity sermon in aid of the poor fund. Every word of the discourse was listened to with the most marked attention by the large congregation that filled the church. The lesson and text of the evening were read from the 22nd chapter of Matthew. The bishop dwelt on the condition of the world in general, and Rome in particular, on the descent of Christ. Not an orphan asylum existed in all Rome, and the poor were oppressed. Before and after the sermon the choir rendered special music with telling effect.

CHARMING RHEA

Brief Interview With the Brillian Actress—"La Czarina' the Success of Her Life.

Yesterday merning Mile. Rhea and her talented company arrived in the city and put up at the Tecumseh House. An Advertiser reporter was accorded a brief interview with the distinguished star. Rhea is as charming a woman as she is an actress. Her manners are at once gracious and fascinating, and her silvery accents make it a pleasure to listen to her. She has that majestic bearing which so well fits her for the queenly roles she always assumes on the stage.

make it a pleasure to listen to her. She has that majestic bearing which so well fits her for the queenly roles she always assumes on the stege.

"Oh, yes," said she; "I am in splendid health and spirits; in fact I can't remember when I ever felt so well. Do you know the great secret of it? Contentment, peace of mind, freedom from worry. I have been so fortunate for a year past as to have an exceedingly capable manager, a thorough man of business, who takes the very best care of my affairs, and that is such an indescribable relief to me. The strain on an actress who plays the very exacting relev that I do is great enough in all conscience, but when to that is added business cares and worries. O. dear! it is simply frightful," and here Mile. Rhea lifted her hands with a tragic expression of horror.

"But of course," she continued, "you want to know about my new play, 'La Czarina.' Well, it is a great play and I believe I am making the success of my life in it. To be sure, it is what may be called a tragedy, but there is a strong comedy element running through it, and the interest of audiences is constantly kept on the qui vive, wondering what is coming next. The language that Scribe employed in writing it is lofty and beautiful, and everywhere we have been people have returned to see it the second or third time. Election night we played in Watertown, N. Y., the home of Mr. Flower, who was elected Governor of New York, and in spite of the torchlight procession on the street, the jollifications and the excitement generally, we had a packed theater. I could relate many similar experiences to give you a fair idea of how 'La Czarina' is taking with the people."

"Shall you ever produce 'Jesephine' is a beautiful play it is unrelieved by any bright flashes, it is full of sorrows and heartaches, and for that reason rather depresses an audience. I have a new play, however, that I shall produce in the near future. It is by Alexander Dumas, sen, and is called "Katherine Gaunt," after one of the many wives of Henry VIII. I my intention to only play queenly parts, for those are what the public want to see me in, and I, as the public's servant, must obey the edict."

And Mlle. Rhea bid her visitor a pleasant
