Speaks in Defense of His Father, Who Sits as a Private Member -Free Trade Amendments.

London, Feb. 2. - When the House of Commons assembled for business today, the House was crowded and there was great animation. Joseph Chamberlain was warmly cheered by the bulk of the Conservatives. The Secretary of State for Home Affairs, Mr. Akers-Douglas, in the absence of Premier Balfour, temporarily assumed the duties of the House. The mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne both referred with satisfaction to the settlement of the Alaskan dispute and paid tribute to the manner in which the award was received by Hardy (Conservative) Lawrence

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the ed as auxiliary cruisers. Liberal leader in the House, followed. After expressing regret at the absence of the Premier, Sir Henry said he desired to question the Government with a new policy. The only way of dealing with the existing confusion, he added, was to appeal to the common sense of the electors of the country. Sir Henry severely arraigned the Government's attitude on the fiscal question, and announced that John Morley would in a few days introduce a more comprehensive amendment, involving the whole situation. Austen Chamberlain, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, defended the Government, whose fiscal policy, he said, had been clearly to stand by the and opened fire. The police agents Premier. All the Government asked for was freedom to negotiate, which denly realizing that they had stumbled door and freedom to trade.
