A musical federation of the chief Canview British Columbia's provincial secretary, Hon Dr. H. E. Young, and every opportunity and facility possible to hold the McGill university local examinations in music.

"Our university," said Dr. Perrin to even their teacher-can produce. A the Colonist interviewer, "is working to secure a federation of the chief Canadian universities, in order to form a ative or executive power. central board of music which shall ex-

"I have seen Dr. Young, the provincial secretary, on this question of forming a federated Canadian board of musical examiners, and he has promised to give the project his hearty support as minister for education. From personal experience as examiner and adjudicator here and in England I am onvinced that there is as good music in Canada as ever came into it."

The Sheffield Choir.

"What did you think of the Sheffield choir, Dector?"

"There is a case in point," said the eminent professor of music at McGill university. "The Sheffield Choir in Canada was killed with kindness. It was in the first place a mistake to advertise them as the "finest English choir." They were no more representative of the best choral societies in |INNER HISTORY England than would be an Australian cricket team visiting the old country.

DE LAVAL CREAM SEPARATORS We Know

the next best competative separator, and this margin of difference is steadily widening with finement of the NEW IMPROVED DE LAVAL. The difference in manufacturing cost begins with the extra heavy tinware in supply can and covers and is shown in every scientific and mechanical detail of the separator, even to the special enamelling of the handsome frame and the box in which the complete separator is shipped. Everything upon which the name "DE LAVAL" is stamped must be of the best, and no system of inspection is too rigid nor too expensive to insure this. The result is shown in the unique posion of De Laval separators in the dairy world, where during thirty years their supremacy has never been in doubt.

No one has a better opportunity to determine the relative value of different separators than the creamery operator: He separates milk in large quantities and receives cream from a wide area in which every make of separator is used. Some years ago creamerymen as a class discovered through careful and often expensiv tests that the difference between De Laval separators and others was all the difference between profit and loss, with the result that the manufacture of factory size separators was practically discontinue by all but the De Laval Separator Company. Not only do 98 per cent of creamerymen use the De Laval exclusively, but they recommend its use by their patrons on account of the particularly smooth quality of the cream, together with the thorough work of the machine under all conditions, including the production of the heaviest cream.

Last year 15,000 users of inferior separators traded them for the De Laval. These men could have bought the De Laval in the first place for the same or less than was paid for the more cheaply-made machines. They have learned from costly experience that the claim that another is "as good" as the Le Laval separator does not make it so, and that a machine which delivers cream from one spout and skim milk from another is not necessarily a cream separator when measured by the De Laval standard. Read the following extract from a letter we have just received: "I know your machine well, having used your No. 1 for some time. Having need for a larger machine I wrote your company, but didn't get in touch with you right way, and in the meantime was led to believe that the M—— would fill the bill, and much to my disgust now find it won't skim a 30 per cent cream and do it perfectly. I have always taken especial care to have machine set perfectly level and on a cement foundation, though the manufacturer claimed it to be unnecessary." This man used the "just as good separator" 3 months, sacrificed $100 and bought a De Laval.

There could be no greater mistake upon the part of anyone who milks two or more cows than to put off the purchase of a crea mseparator this year. Two cows and a De Laval will produce as much butter as three cows without the sep-arator, and the labor will be less. If you keep only enough cows to supply your own table the use of a De Laval will give you butter to sell, the proceeds of which will go towards meeting current expenses. The De Laval pays for itself. which will go towards meeting current expenses. The De Laval pays for itself. It earns in cash every time it is used a part of its purchase price and may be bought upon terms which will enable you to meet payments out of increase price and may be enue. Why delay any longer? Your nearest De Laval agent will furnish you a machine of suitable size for free trial if desired and you will be at liberty to com-pare it in your own home with any other kind in case you may doubt the good judgment of creamerymen and almost two million De Laval users.
