Nearly the whole of the traffic of this new system will be wheat, largely to be con-sumed in eastern Canada or shipped abroad. More than 6,000,000 bushels are expected from the Northwest this year, most of which should pass through Mont-real. Next year's crops should afford 10,000,000 bushels. The facilities of Mont-real for this trade, he points out, are en-tirely inadequate. He therefore proposes that a series of elevators, of say 400,000 bushels capacity each, should be construct-ed below the Bonsecours market. This will form part of the harbor facilities of Montreal, and the first two can be reached by the Grand Trunk as well as the Cana-Who stands so near to the engineer Always true to his terrible trust ; He's worthy a splendid welcome for He'd stick to his post till the biler bust.

will form part of the harbor lacinties of Montreal, and the first two can be reached by the Grand Trunk as well as the Cana-dian Pacific. Mr. Van Horne, on these considerations, asks that the use of certain sites, which he designates, should be granted the Canadian Pacific railway at a neminal rent, for not less than 50 years. The Canadian Pacific company, he adds, has not at this time any available funds for the construction of these elevators, its present resources being pledged to the fulfilment of its obligations to the domin-ion government. It is proposed, therefore, that the first two or more elevators shall be constructed by an elevator company and leased to the railway company, the latter operating them and guaranteeing interest on their cost until such time as it may be convenient to acquire them by purchase. For this reason a lease of the ground if granted by the harbor board should run to the elevator company. There was a burst of applause when F. W. Arnold, grand master of the brother-hood, rose to deliver his annual address. Although a young man, Mr. Arnold has sat in seven conventions and appears to have the working and condition of the order at his finger tips. He lives at Terre Haute, Ind. The grand master reviewed with pride the rapid progress of the brother-hood, and spoke of the good work it had done. The following passing from his ad-dress demonstrates that the order above all other things is a benevolent one: At our annual convention of 1883, held at Denver, the representa-tives of the order found that there was in the treasury a surplus of $19,000. There were outstanding death claims to the amount of $13,200, not one dollar of which could be demanded legaily or justly. The dead firemen had forfeited their right to the money—they had in some cases been wanting in fidelity to their obligations, and in some cases through the dereliction of duties of the officers of the lodge to which they belonged, but the delegates, realizing the frailties of our common humanity, and the necessities of widows and orphans, forgave all the delinquencies of their departed comrades, and with an exhibition of charity unparalleled in the histery of any order, paid every claim, and thus sent sumhine and joy into many a darkened home. It was a glorious finale of the tenth annual convention of our beloved order. Ma further on Mr. Arnold said : But the brotherhood of locomotive firements and principles fruitful of perpetity. If we look out for the dead, we are equally devoted to our comrades while living. We demand that they shall be capable, sober and industrious. We propose that a freman who is not a member of our order. Speeches were also delivered by Gen. Lefroy, a member of the British associa-tion, and by Dr. Wild. The latter's re-marks were spirited and characteristic, and he established himself a favorite of the fromen at once. The loss by the London car works seems to have been exaggerated by the first despatches, which placed it at $500,000. It is now estimated to be about $150,000.
