

Junior Department.

The Junior Editor and all his young companions share in the gloomy sadness that has lately spread its darksome pall over the community. A devoted priest and professor has left our midst to receive his reward "in realms beyond." Feeling deeply the loss we have sustained by the death of kind Father Howe, we extend our warmest sympathies to the Faculty of the University. We assure them that we shall prove our love and esteem for the departed priest by constantly praying for his eternal rest.

The night on which the January number of THE REVIEW was distributed to the knickerbocker tribe, was remarkable for its unusual occurrences. As the Junior Editor peeped through the key-hole of the recreation-hall door, he was surprised to discover an uncommonly peaceful and noiseless spirit in Lilliput. Upon further inquiry, he was informed that, at the time of his stolen visit to the hall of sport, all the Juniors were absorbed in the pages of their own department of the college magazine. It took several minutes to incite them to take exercise.

As soon as the youngsters had finished reading the contents of their
