

Routine Proceedings

Customs and Excise Division of Revenue Canada produced a poster highlighting a logo and the words "A Proud New Image".

The purpose of the poster was to inform the Canadian public and the Customs and Excise employees of the new departmental identity which provides a quick and easy recognition of all Customs and Excise material. Until then, there was no common symbol for Customs and Excise.

The poster was created by the design firm Banfield Seguin and some 12,000 copies were printed.

Before commencing the work on the poster, the Communications Branch invited two designers to discuss their ideas. It was decided by a committee created within the Department to hire the firm Banfield Seguin.

The printer for the poster was chosen by DSS.

The poster was distributed to all Customs and Excise employees and to various offices of Customs and Excise.

The cost of designing the poster and submitting camera-ready artwork with colour separation was $2,171. The cost of printing the poster through DSS was $4,950.

The standardization of one common graphic for use by both Customs and Excise means significant savings.
