

Books by the Same Author

STRAY LEAVES, OR TRACES OF TRAVEL

"I have enjoyed its sketches of travel immensely, and have only one fault to find with them—they are too short! One wishes for a great deal more of the same easy, graceful, vivid writing."—Christian Reid.

"The whole book is light and airy, and makes interesting reading."—The Brooklyn Tablet.

"If the reader likes a book of travels written as is 'Stray Leaves, or Traces of Travel,' with that touch of elusive charm and that power of expression that brings the scenes described before the mental vision as if vividly as if painted, then the reader will be glad to have this book on a quiet day, an opportune and secluded reading-place, with no companion to interrupt."—Mrs. S. M. O'Malley.

"It is full of interest and charm, the impressions, keen and artistic, of one who was on familiar ground in his wide range of journeys."—The Catholic World.

THE HOLY HOUSE OF LORETO

"The book before us cannot be disposed of by any supercilious assumption that 'scholars no longer doubt that the Holy House is a fraud.'"—The Ave Maria.