Learning at this place of a new sirke of gold a few miles north I hird a horse and buggy and dieve to make the find was reported to have been made. On this journey of five miles over a road remarkably food considering the rough character of the country. I noticed by the ways pearance, would carry gold.

The reported discovery of a new find I proved to be true. Isaac Golding of Millbridge owns lot 7 in the 5th concession of Tudor, containing, as lots fenerally do in that region, 200 acres of hier to unfruitful land. The place of shelt our five miles east of the village and four miles from the Central Ontario Railway, and is at present, because of uncleared underbush, rather inaccessible. Until a couple of weeks ago Mr. Golding would have sold the lot for $100, but now it is not for sale at all. He thinks he has a good thing and he intends to keep it. The vein, which he accidentally stumbled upon, appears to be 16 or 12 feet wide at the surface. The outcropping so of a body of mispickel, or arsenical ore, which has every evidence of being rich in quality. One good indication was the discovery of free gold in the decomposed quartz at the surface. Some of this, crushed and panned in .75 skirts, trimmming, 1.00 sands of dollars' worth of gold, just how much is not known. There is some prospect of this mine being worked again, but at present it is understood that a long-pending lawsuit over the title to 'the property has so far prevented operations from being resumed.

At Eldorado station I noticed awaiting shipment several cars of red-colored iron ore from the hematite iron mine near by, which I visited later. A few minutes more and, after passing through rocky hills and woods, interspersed with nice bits of farming land, the train pulled up at Bannock-burn, and I got off, leaving several parties of deer-hunters on board to pursue their journey.

Bannockburn is a hamlet of 150 or 200 people on the banks of the River Moira, which for part of the year supplies power to the saw and grist mills boasted by the village. The mine, which is just a few store street force.

A CARPENTER KILLED. A CARPENTER KILLED.

While Alex. Trudel, a carpenter, who resided at 118 St. Emile-street, St. Henri, was at work on a building in course of construction, on St. Jean-street, St. Henri, this morning, a piece of timber fell from the roof and struck him on the head, killing him instantly. Trudel was removed to his home, and Coroner McMahon was informed of the occurrence. He will hold an inquest this evening.

over a great part of Tudor.

WORK ON THE BANNOCKBURN.

The mine was discovered several years ago and considerable work was done upon it, a ten-stamp mill and an outift for treating the ore being put in place. After some fine samples of ore had been taken out operations were discontinued until August, 1894, when the property was leased, with the option to purchase, by Messrs. F. Straith Miller of Toronto and F. S. P. Fanchot of Buckingham, Que, and development was resumed. I, however, found the mine idle. The workings, which are only 300 yards from the mill, consist of five shafts, varying in depth from 40 to 85 feet, and connected for the most part by cuttings. The vein thus exposed consists of three main stringers in a fissure of calc schists, which unite and become highly auriferous lower down. Free fold has been picked up along almost every part of the opening, and the various pits sunk have produced slingle specimens of quartz varying in value from 38 to 315. The mine is said to be a rich one yet. As, however, the shafts were full of water at the time of my visit, I was unable to verify the statements made. A new syndicate is now trying to get hold of the property, and it may be worked again son.

Prof. Smith and Cornell.

Ithaca, N.Y., Nov. 12.—Prof. Goldwin Smith does not let his friendly interest in Cornell flag. It will be remembered that when Cornell was founded he resigned his professorship in the University of Oxford, England, to accept a professorship in Cornell, without accepting any pay, however. Yearly he slips quietly down from Toronto to lecture to his "old class in English History." As he is now growing old and does not fele equal to large audiences he does not give notice when he is coming. He always has as many listeners as the lecture room will permit, however. He lectured at Cornell this fall on the intimate relation of English and American sentiments and institutions. He does not believe with Douglass Campbell in the vital influence of the Dutch upon America.
