"No," was the hesitating reply.
"Well, we heard you did."
"If you print anything about it I'll have you pinched," shouted Mr. Scanlon in wrathful tones through the phone.
Detective Robert Egelton also grew warm under the collar for a December day when the subject was broached to him. In fact, Mr. Egelton didn't stop at the King's English, but hunted through his own private dictionary for words to express his opinion of reporters who, he stated, did their best to kill the best efforts of the police in the course of their duty.

So far as could be learned from the police, these "best efforts" have had no results so far as an arrest is concerned.

Inspector C. B. Edwards has an encouraging report for the end of the week in regard to the schools. Where there were thirty cases of influenza just a week ago, there are only twenty now, indicating a decided abatement. One school district particularly affected in the past two weeks is showing an encouraging decrease in the number of cases.

How It Was Done.

The method adopted to cope with the situation was the placing of one of the school nurses in charge of that school district and having her devote all her time to it. The results of vigilance in following up cases and seeing that instructions re isolation, etc., have been carried out have been highly satisfactory, according to the inspector.
