CIVIL WAR AND STRIKE THREATS

with Sir Wilfrid Laurier. On the other hand, it was idle to give the conscription law unless public sentiment would sustain its enforcement. In Great Britain conscription was effective by the country and a national government.

Calls for Coalition.

The Lord George government might be termed a military dictatorship, but it rested upon the common consent of the people and was evolved through the formation of a coalition government.

Mr. Neely, therefore, called upon Sir Robert Borden and Sir Wilfrid Laurier to come together and see if they could not form a national government. He hoped that next Monday day when we were celebrating the semi-centenary of confederation, His majesty's golden jubilee, the country might be thrilled by the announcement that the two great leaders had come together in an earnest effort to win the war and at the same time preserve unimpaired the unity of the nation.

Chabot Uninterruited.

Dr. Chabot (Ottawa) said he would vote against the referendum and in favor of the conscription bill. He would do this in spite of many threatening letters he had received from his constituents, in which he was called a coward and a traitor, and threatened with death in many ingenious forms. Parliament he said was the custodian of the nation's honor and could not pass on the responsibility to the people. The idea of a referendum was repugnant to British traditions, a representative of the responsible government, in passing

Dr. Chabot took occasion to eulogize Canadian surgeons and nurses at the front and to defend the various Canadian hospitals. He said the man who reported that these hospitals were inefficient erred through lack of observation or more probably through malice.

Mr. McCall (West Kent) said if the government would double the pay of the soldiers there would be no difficulty in getting 100,000 more volunteers. The soldiers' families could not live on the pittance they were receiving, which had not been increased since the war commenced, although the cost of living had doubled. It was poor pay and poor pensions which made men reluctant to enlist.

If they had anyone dependent upon them for support, his riding had sent 2000 soldiers to the front, but there
