"Good afternoon, Mrs. Blackburn," chorused the crowd.

Mrs. Blackburn then proceeded to give the most astonishing demonstration of how a simple and practical but very effective evening gown could be draped in 15 minutes and completed in

After this, the most unique feature of the meeting took place—namely, a parade of the garments which had been made during the course, and which were displayed by their proud owners and makers. The different classes were called up to the platform in turn were called up to the platform in turn. Both the dressmaking and tailoring section of each had a goodly display of from 15 to 25 garments. Mrs. Black-burn spoke of each one, showing the good points and telling whether or not the maker had had any previous ex-perience. In the vast majority of cases they had had none whatever. There were quite a number who had made house dresses or children's clothes, but only very few had really done any sewing before. Everything, from house dresses to tailored suits, was represewers was the unbounded enthusiasm and interest which was displayed on all sides, and the since reaffection all showed for their indefatigable and many aver, the laboratory man to warm-hearted instructress.

A Charming Personality. Mrs. Blackburn is a daughter of Canada, born less than a thundred miles from Toronto. As one of her pupils said of her: "She has a charm of personality such as is seldom found together in one woman."

At the end of this unique parade the ladies took matters in their own hands. A representative committee of each class had been formed, which, entirely on its own initiative, tendered an address of thanks, read by Mrs Devine, to the Robert Simpson Company for the fulfilment of a long-felt want. They then proceeded to express their appreciation to Mrs. Blackburn, Mr. Cook, her business manager, and Miss Buchanan of Simpson's store, who had assisted. Mrs. Blackburn was presented with a beautiful broach, Miss Buchanan with a lovely leather handbag, and Mr. Cook with a fine umbrella. Several ladies of the committee gave very nice little speeches of appreciation. Mrs. Blackburn made a most characteristic reply, in which she said that her aim had been to teach practical, sensible sewing to practical, sensible women. wanted them to join with her in trying to raise the moral standard of women's clothing, and exhorted them' to keep their needles busy and sewing machines humming, so they would not forget what they had already learned. BESSIE.

Bessie is, of course, one of the deivatives of Elizabeth, but so frequently is it given in baptism without any reference to its more proper antecedent that it has come to be regarded as a separate and distinct name.

Thru its association with Elizabeth it has its source in the old Hebrew name Elisheba, and probably came to be evolved from the shortening of Elizabeth to Beth, whence Bess shortly followed. The first Bess on record is said to have been Elizabeth Woodville, whose mother, Jacquetta of Luxemburg, imported it from Flanders. Shakspere's "Edward IV." called her Ress, and her daughter, Elizabeth of Yorke, was called "Lady Bessee" in verses which told of the political courtship of Henry of Richmond. "Pretty Bessee" is the granddaughter of Simon de Montfort.

"Good Queen Bess" is too well and when he reached West Sandling every three young women bearing the famous 19th Battalion. He leaves endearing form of Bess, came to be name of the queen. How Bessee, the a widowed mother, five sisters and one spelled Bessie is not satisfactorily explained, unless it is the Scotch preference which gained vogue in England. Whether it is that Toronto women have only lacked opportunity for exercising their latent talent for sewing, or whether it is that the high cost of clothing has caused the sudden sewing fervor, it is certain that a great many women took eager advantage of these classes and large numbers had to be turned away.

The meeting on Saturday afternoon, which marked the final lesson of the series, included all four classes. The hall, which was curtained off on the sixth floor, was filled to capacity with women who had taken the classes. There was an air of excitement and most unbounded enthusiasm. Three Classes Drawn.

There were three classes of people drawn to psychical studies, said the speaker, the merely curious, those who turned to spiritualism as a substitute for a lost faith, and thirdly, and thirdly, and thirdly, and thirdly and those included in the large fellowship of the bereaved. The Christian answer to these varied cravings was purely in dependent of any physical means. "We are as certain of our communion with each other on this plane." said Dr. Davies, "Our departed friends are with Him, and while we may not know where they are or what they are doing it is sufficient to know that they are with that infinite love which for a period gave them into our stewardship. If we seek communion with them, then, let it be thru Christ who is the sovereign of the Unseen World."

thod of getting information known only to our departed beloved, that is at the same time impossible of communication to others on the unseen planes, then, we must fall back upon the best moral curies. This can be done only by dealing with the unseen world thru Christ. The Christian has this moral curitide. If it were not true Christ would not have told us.

How the Communication?

"But, how can Sir Oliver Lodge depend upon communications from his have soldier son, Raymond, received thru the medium of a Red Indian or of a Yogi who lived many centuries ago. of economic conditions. The outcome of the war has shown us that the war did not consist in the mere question of democracy." The victory of the allies, he considered, was not a victory for pure democracy over autocracy, but was the defeat of a group of powers that presented a more autocratic kind of thought than that on our side.

While war has destroyed lives, pro-perty, production and other things material, the speaker was afraid we did not realize the effects on the mentality of the peoples. There had been a lot of cant and lying about the effect of the war on the so-called soldier heroes, he said. "I think it is the duty of any soldier who has been thru war to speak up, even at the risk of making himself unpopular." Thirty Members of St. John's Church Pay Supreme Sacrifice.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend." These words spoken with deep emotion meant something more than a mere Biblical quotation to the hushed audience, as the Rev. W. L. Baynes-Reed faced them, in St. Mark's Anglican Church, West Toconto, last night. It was the occasion of the unveiling of a memorial tablet to thirty members of the church who had lost their lives while defending the country's honor during the great war.

This took the place of the regular Sunday evening service, and Major (Rev.) Baynes-Reed, D.S.O., rector of St. John's Anglican Church, Norway, conducted the ceremony.

"Thy name liveth forevermore," was the text taken by the major, and in enlarging upon it, he spoke emo-tionally of the great part the name of Christ played in the trenches of France and Flanders, Men who had not hitherto accepted their Maker, at that time of stress turned to him or that time of stress turned to him as to a guide who would lead them to to a guide who would lead them to paths of peace and quietness.
