

SEES SUBSIDY ENCOURAGEMENT TO REVOLUTION

Ramsay MacDonald Explains Why He Opposes Baldwin Mins Settlement

SAYS CIRCUMSTANCES OF ACTION OMINOUS

Charges Government Lost Weeks and Months in Dealing With Problems

NEW YORK, Aug. 19.—J. Ramsay MacDonald, first Labor premier of England, explains in an article in "The Nation" why he opposes Premier Baldwin's coal subsidy.

"The country," he says, "is mingling trembling with its dissatisfaction, and well it may, for the circumstances attending this dispute and its settlement are ominous. For at least 12 months this coming clash was apparent."

NOTE SHILL AND SELFISH. "The first note of battle sounded by the owners was shrill and selfish. Profit had to be secured first and wages afterwards. Two things followed. The whole labor forces came together. Never has such unity been known in the trade union movement. Every union made the miners position its own because it felt that if this challenge was successful it would be repeated all along the line and thrown at every trade in turn. The other thing was that public sympathy was with the men."

PROBLEM MANHANDLED. "Then, the government acted and practically manhandled the problem. The last weeks and months when intervention might have been effective in the end the only thing that could happen did happen. As in the decaying days of the Roman Empire, when invaders had to be bought off, so peace had now to be purchased by spending tax-payers' money."

LONDON, Aug. 19.—Reputed new Chinese coastal regulations, in which British and Japanese ships are excluded from various ports, and a boycott of the international port of Hong Kong implied, have created a new angle to the situation in the Far East, to which the British government is giving careful study.

Warns Unions

MARQUIS OF LONDONDERRY. In a recent speech in Wales he declared that if the miners' unions forced a revolution over the coal question, the British people would resent their action to such an extent that unionism would be smashed and labor men would have to begin their work of reconstruction from the bottom up.
