Work for Prisoners. resorts for the idle and shameless portion of the people, and their cost to the community at large grows steadily greater. It is time that a radical change should be made. There should be no drones in the public hive. Every man should be given the opportunity of earning a living, and every criminal, no matter what his offence, should be made to work for his keeping or pay his board. Prisons should cease to be loaging places for vagabonds. We don't board. Prisons should cease to be lodging places for vagabonds. We don't mean that criminals should be treated harshly, or insufficiently fed and clothed, or made to work merely as a punishment for crimes committed, but that they should be made useful, so that they should be made useful, so that they may cost the taxpayers as little as possible. In some countries the convicts earn enough to pay their keeping, in others their earnings are nearly enough to do so, while in this Province the amount earned by the imprisoned is very small indeed.

Vagabonds are sent to the jail every day, on sentences of five, ten, thirty or sixty days, for such offences as street drunkenness, and do nothing there but eat and lounge and s'eep—a method of spending the time that hundreds of overworked people would like to try for a few weeks if they could afford the luxury. If something could afford the luxury. If something could be provided for these prisoners to do it would lighten the expense of keeping them and lessen the attractions of the institution. somebody else would contract for their labor at ten cents a day it would be a good thing for the community. Anything is better than the idleness of ablebodied men and women at the public expense. We sincerely hope that a scheme will be perfected, adopted by the Sessions, and immediately carried into effect.

The great library of the late Sir Thos.

Work for Prisoners.

It is not exactly right that honest people should have to work for the support of vagabonds and rascals, and yet this is the case at present. The County Jail is full of people all the time who are able to work for a living, but prefer the comfortable quarters, blissful idleness, and substantial food of the jail.
