Summer Joya On a cloadiess noon, is the month of June, How pleasant is is to wis The cool, thick shade, by the tall oak made, In front of the village inn. And O, what bliss to reselve a kins From the lips of her you love: Whose eyes so bright can rival the light Of the silvery lawpe above. A moment more, from that shady door, You merrily ride awey ; But I safely bei that you forget The words that you meant to say. But many a noon, of many a June, Must pase with many a year, Ere the maiden's heart will ever part With the love she holds so dear.
