The Widow's Son

By Mrs. E. Southworth

"Success to you! The medical profession in the vast benefits it confers upon society, is second to none, and equalled by one."

While the young men thus conversed, they were interrupted by the entrance of Lily Gay with a fresh cup and saucer plate, and by Nancy with the exclamation:

"I told you so! She ain't in the garden Lor'! why that ain't Master William! How do you do sir! And how did you leave all the folks at Rogue?"

"Very well, I thank you Nancy! How are you?" returned the young man cordially, extending his hand to the faithful old woman.

"Middling, Master William, honey just middling, and no more."

"Nancy did you say Lily May was not in the garden?"

"No! I told you so before! I knowed she wasn't. I went to look there for her, and now I have proved."

"Then she must be in some room upstairs. Go and look for her, Nancy and tell her we are at breakfast."

And Owen dear, don't wait any longer sit down. Willie must want his breakfast. And Lily May will be here by the time I pour coffee. Willie, it is coffee, mind you, not a mixture of burnt rice, chockery and dandelion!

We 'broy it in the grain, and roast and grind it ourselves. Sit down," said Lily Gay, cheerfully, as her white hands fluttered among the teacups and saucers, tinkling silver teaspoons and drooping sugar, and pouring cream to enrich the exhilarating morning beverage.

She had served the coffee to each one, and they were awaiting it with great relish, when Nancy re-entered the room saying:

"She ain't upstairs nowhere—nowhere at all!"

"Well now, that is very odd! Did you look in all the rooms, Nancy inquired Lily Gay.

"In every single one, and even in the closets."

"Let me look! Excuse me, Willie Excuse me, Owen. I will be back in one moment," said Lily Gay, starting away from the table, and running to the door.

"Nancy," said Owen uneasily, "have you not seen her this morning?"

"Not a single sound of her! She ain't been downstairs since I've been up, and that I'll take my davy O!"

The offices of hospitality claimed Owen's attention. He helped the traveler to a hot muffin, a rasher of bacon, a boiled egg the castors, etc., and then turned his face toward the door, listening and waiting for the return of his sister.

William Spicer, junior, in an interval of examining himself, noticed this manner of his friend, and as soon he had swallowed, inquired:

"I hope there is no reason to be uneasy?" "Oh, no," answered Owen smiling, "only it is unusual for Lily May to be so late."

While he spoke Lily Gay entered the room in excitement, exclaiming:

"Owen, she is not anywhere in house She has certainly gone out, because her school-bonnet and mantle and satchel have gone too!"

"How strange! But don't be too frightened," she may have gone out on some little errand of her own and detained longer than she was expected to be," said Owen. "Oh yes!" exclaimed Lily Gay, brightened up, "I know now just where she has gone! She has gone to the school to get the books that we left behind! And that is the reason why she went so early and took her satchel."

"How?"

"Oh, you see, she went early so as to get there before the pupils assembled and the school commenced. And she took the satchel to bring the books in."

"I should be sorry if I thought had gone to the school. The place where she received so great—" began Owen, but recollecting that Willie Spicer was present and was ignorant of what had happened on the previous day, he suddenly stopped and then resumed in another manner:

"I rather think she has gone out to post a letter or to make some little purchase, for which she feels pressed. I really wish she would return."

This last sentence revealed that undertone of an anxiety that the young man felt, without comprehending, and tried to emanate, without succeeding.

Meanwhile Willie Spicer made an excellent breakfast. "Tell me, Willie said Lily Gay, how is your father, and how does he bear his solitude when you are away?"

"Oh he is all right, but to speak the plain truth, he does not bear his solitude very well. I told him that I should graduate in the spring and after that should return no more to Rogue's Harbor. What should an enterprising young man do at Rogue?"

"Nothing whatever, and yet I feel a very deep sympathy for your good father! his lonely old age said Owen."

"He shall not be lonely. I will keep my word with him. The young woman shall redeem the child's promise. And when you leave him finally to settle in New York, Willie, I will go down to Rogue's Harbor and be his daughter and keep house. I will do it because he was so good to my poor mother, and because I love him."

The young student turned, and smiled upon the impulsive girl, saying:

"But there are others to be considered in this matter, fair lady. How for one, will my friend Wynne like

IF KIDNEYS ACT BAD TAKE SALTS

Says Backache is sign you have been eating too much meat.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy.

When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

to part with his sister to an old man hundreds of miles away?"

"Oh! I was never Owen's favorite sister. He will do very well without me, or am I much mistaken."

"What do you say, Wynne?"

"I say that the proposition is a matter for future consideration. If the old man were quite alone down there, and my sister wished to go and fill a daughter's place in his desolate home, I should not prevent her from doing so."

"Wynne, you do come out sometimes with surprising things! But I am happy to tell you both that the sacrifice for it really would be a sacrifice will not be needed. My father has made a fortune which will enable him to retire from business. He will sell out in Rogue's Harbor, and take a house in New York."

"I am really very glad to hear that. And you will reside with him?"

"Of course."

"Next spring when I graduate Lily Gay looked from one to the other of the speakers, as if unable to believe the evidence of her own senses, and then she suddenly clasped her hands with joy, exclaiming:

"Oh that is better than anything I could have hoped for. Mr. Spicer coming to live in New York! Why I should almost as soon have expected to see the old church transport itself to the city! And he is really coming to live among us! Oh Owen, how delightful that will be! To have him settled somewhere uptown! And to go and spend days with him, as we used to do in the old times! And to have him come and spend days with us! It is almost too good to be true!"

Thus gaily chatting, Lily Gay arose from the table, and the others followed her example.

Summoned by the hand-bell, Nancy came in to clear the table.

"Set the coffee-pot on the stove to keep it hot for Lily May," she cannot be long in coming home now said the young lady, as she left the table and went to her workstand

$2,000,000 TAKINGS AT ONE MEETING

$308,000 FOR THE CLUB Windsor, Oct. 5.—Testifying Saturday afternoon before Dr. J. G. Rutherford, Government commissioner appointed to investigate race tracks in Canada, Chief of Police Elias Wills of Windsor: A. P. Healy, president of the local Chamber of Commerce, and other prominent residents, said the crowd from Detroit that patronized the local tracks were well behaved.

"There has been no indication of any increase of crime in the city," the police chief said, "as a result of racing. There are, however, too many tracks in this district, and I consider they might be reduced to one."

The race track habitues are only different to other persons by reason of the flashy clothes they wear was suggested in the evidence of President Healy, who said that track patrons from Detroit "are wealthy, of good class, who wear clothes somewhat more flashy than us Canadians."

The examination of George N. Hendrie, president of the Windsor Jockey Club, disclosed that the club handled more than $2,000,000 in pari-mutuel machines at the one meeting in 1917.

The year before the mutual system of speculation was installed the club received $81,150 from book-makers for the privilege of operating handbooks at the track. The year following, when the mutuels were in operation, the association received in "take-off" or percentage from the machines $196,650. In 1916 this was increased to $308,000.
