

after the words, "And other sheep I have which are not of this fold," and said, "Don't you think our Lord means such people as those at Shin Kwoh Tsow?"

Liu is just going back to his home again, to do more sowing for the Lord of the harvest. He that soweth and he that reapeth might now rejoice together, if only "he that reapeth" were here. "But the labourers are few" - in this vast field, very few indeed. Wesleyan Missionary Notices.

The Missionary Nuts.

How fair are the woods in the ripe Autumn weather

How tempting the nuts as they cover the ground

Now Duncan and Jessie go nutting together.

Two bright, happy children as ever were found

Just look at the chestnuts, how plump and inviting.

Wee brown, satin bags, stuffed as full as can be,

The hearts of the two busy children delighting.

See Duncan and Jessie down under the tree.

But, oh! do you think these are like any others?

They're not common nuts I would have you to know.

For these are to help far-off sisters and brothers.

For Mission Band money these nuts are to go.

There's no little Band where the children are living,

Like the one they belonged to before they came there.

And yet, they must always keep on with their giving.

So the first Mission Circle may still have its share

Just think how a bushel of nuts will surprise them:

For chestnuts don't grow in that town far away.

And surely no person will need to advise them

To sell them for all that the people will pay.

At last with some help, all the nuts are collected,

In Duncan's new wagon the box finds a place.

Then, Jessie takes hold, as might be expected,

And off to the station the little ones race.

How it went on the cars, how papa wrote a letter,

How the children rejoiced when the box came to hand,

And sold all the nuts I believe it is better

To leave you to guess, for you all understand.

But put on your thinking-caps this very minute,

Pray, what can you do for your own Mission Band?

If you think of some new thing, make haste to begin it.

Or do all the old things with a readier hand
