

MY FREE TRIAL TREATMENT MAY CURE YOU

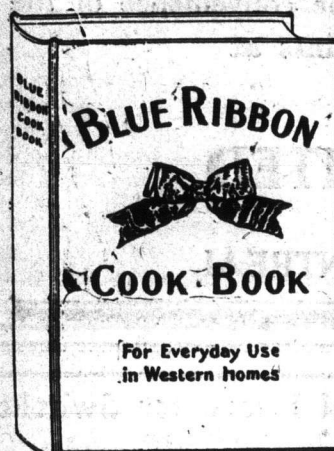

Dear Mrs. Currah.—I feel so very much better after using the 10 days' treatment of ORANGE LILY you were kind enough to send, that I will not require any more. In fact, I feel entirely well, and it is now a month since I stopped using the treatment.

Similar letters to the above are not infrequent, though, of course, such cases are not of long standing. Most women who have suffered for any length of time will require to use ORANGE LILY longer than the Trial Treatment in order to effect a complete cure, but in every case they will be perceptibly benefited. Further, the benefit will be permanent whether they continue to use ORANGE LILY or not. It is not taken internally, and does not contain any alcohol or other stimulant. It is an applied treatment, and acts directly on the suffering organs. In all cases of women's disorders, these organs are congested to a greater or less extent, and ORANGE LILY will relieve and remove this congestion just as positively and certainly as the action of ammonia or soap on soiled linen. It is a simple chemical problem, and the result is always the same, a step towards better health and complete cure.

In order that every suffering woman may prove its good qualities, I will send enough of ORANGE LILY for 10 days' treatment, absolutely free, to each lady who will send me her address. MRS. FRANCES E. CURRAH, WINDSOR, ONT. 10 creature is caught in the web the spider feels the web shake, and out he runs to see what has happened.

Spiders are very clever. If you should touch a green one, he would double up his little legs and fall from the place where you saw him. If you did not notice that he was hanging from his thread you would likely say: "It is only a green leaf." There is a brown spider that does the same thing, hoping to be taken for a brown leaf.

The trap-door spider makes her house by digging a hole in the ground; she scratches it up with her front legs and carries out the tiny lumps of earth until there is a nice long hole. She lines this with fine silk, which she weaves herself, then makes a little door of leaves and sticks woven together with her silk and fastens it on with a silken hinge. This is a safe, warm home for the baby spiders, and if the mother hears some dangerous creature trying to get in she holds onto the door with all her might, and the children run to the other end of the house. The spider children are very industrious; they amuse themselves by making tiny houses just like the one their mother has made, so that when they grow up they can make safe, warm houses for their own children.

Some spiders live under the water in little balls made of their own silk; some live under the ground, and others live in trees or in our houses. There are big and little spiders of many different colors, but they can all run very fast for they have eight legs.—Amelia De Wolfers.

That Young Misbehave.

By R. H. Woodbine.

Mina Welding was a bright girl, though perhaps not as bright as she thought herself. But that may be said of a great many people.

One evening she came bounding into the house and said to her mother, who was sewing in the sitting-room:

"Mother, I hear that Mr. Sandover, the editor of the Compass, wants a clerk. That's just the kind of a position I'd like."

"Has he advertised for a clerk?" asked Mrs. Welding.

"No, he's afraid he'll have a crush of applicants, and so he's just looking around and trying to find the clerk he wants in a quiet way. Somebody mentioned me to him, and he said he wished I'd come up to his office. I'm going the first thing in the morning."

"I hope you'll succeed," said her mother. "You could earn your own pin money, and maybe help a little to keep the pot boiling these hard times."

If you think Mina delayed her going to Mr. Sandover's office the next day, you do not know what an energetic little body she was. Bright and early she entered the office. She stated her errand in her brisk way, and told Mr. Sandover about her acquirements.

"I am pleased with what you say," Mr. Sandover stated at the end of the interview. "Come up day after tomorrow, and I may give you a trial with some work."

The young girl hurried home in a very hopeful frame of mind, and told her mother that Mr. Sandover and his office were "just delightful." It would be "splendid" to work in such a place.

In this sanguine mood she spent the day, and in the evening she and her "chum," Lizzie Osgood, went to a service in one of the churches—the one the girls usually attended. It was a small church in the suburbs, near Mina's home.

Now, you would scarcely believe it of Mina, but truth compels me to say that she was not as well behaved in church services and at other gatherings as she should have been.

That evening she and Lizzie did a great deal of "cutting up," as they called it. They had a vast amount of sport themselves, and kept the circle of girls around them in a titter, disturbing many people who wanted to listen to the sermon, so that the minister had to reprimand them.

That made Mina angry. But whom do you suppose she saw when the service was over, as she turned to look back over the church?

"Oh, Lizzie," she whispered, "there's my editor, Mr. Sandover, the man I'm going to work for—any way, I'm almost sure of the position. Isn't he a fine-looking man? He's smart, too, I tell you. He's looking this way now. My! hasn't he got keen eyes?"

At the appointed time the second day after, she made her way to the office of the Compass to decide on the final arrangements about the position. Mr. Sandover turned his revolving chair as she entered and scanned her searchingly.

"Well, you have come to see about that position, have you?" he said. "I was at the Lisbon street church night before last. You were there?"

"Yes," Mina replied, her face turning several colors.

"I saw a couple of girls behaving themselves very badly during the service," the editor went on. "One of them I called in my mind 'that young misbehave.' She was the leader of the mischief."

He paused, and Mina wished the floor would open and let her sink through.

"Now, my young friend, I recognized the girl who conducted herself so badly, and I have decided that any girl who has such mistaken ideas of smartness isn't smart enough to work in my office. She took advantage of the minister and misbehaved when he was not looking. How do I know but she might be dishonest in working for me? I can make no use of your services in my office."

The editor resumed his writing, while Mina crept home an humbler and a wiser girl.

So Old that It Is New.

By Mary Joslyn Smith.

Mabel went into the kitchen one day and asked, "Katy, do you know any new riddle or conundrum? They are all the fashion at school, and I want a new one."

"I know just one, and that is not a new one. I heard it in good old Ireland a long time ago."

"Well, I guess it's so old that it will be new to all of us, so you will teach it to me?"

"A question I will ask of thee, Come, answer if you please."

Tell in what chapter there's a verse With three and fifty t's?"

When Mabel had learned the rhyme she asked Katy the answer.

"That's the hard part for me to remember. It's in the Bible, sure, but I forget where. I remember that the name of the book it is in is a girl's name."

Mabel went to her mother and found the answer to be Esther, the eighth chapter and the ninth verse. Mabel's mother assured her the riddle was old enough to be new at school, and perhaps in many other places.

The First Temperance Society.

The first temperance society in Connecticut, and probably in the world, was organized in Litchfield in 1789. The pledge was as follows: "So many are the avenues leading to misery, that it is impossible to guard them all. Such evils as are produced by our own folly and weakness are within our power to avoid. The immoderate use which the people of our State make of distilled spirits is undoubtedly an evil of this kind. The morals are corrupted, property is exhausted, and health destroyed. Whereupon we do hereby associate and mutually agree that hereafter we will carry on our business without the use of distilled spirits as an article of refreshment either for ourselves or those we employ, and that instead thereof, we will serve our workmen with wholesome food and common, simple drinks of our own production." This was signed by thirty-six men. These facts are recorded by an old county history, and are believed to be well substantiated. Such an agreement among employers of the present day might result in much good.

They Cleanse While They Cure.—The vegetable compounds of which Parkelee's Vegetable Pills are composed, mainly dandelion and mandrake clear the stomach and intestines of deleterious matter and restore the deranged organs to healthful action. Hence they are the best remedy for indigestion available to-day. A trial of them will establish the truth of this assertion and do more to convince the ailing than anything that can be written on these pills.
