The Germans have found a new method for making propaganda for themselves in neutral and even in Allied countries, says the N. Y. Tribune. This new propaganda has asspread in foreign countries.

Recently the Germans published especially for school use the text of Beethoven's "C Minor Sonata." The text is accompanied by copious notes and introductions, the aims of which is to exfol German Kultur and revile the enemies of Germany. According to the editors, only Germans are able to compose sonatas; none of Germany's enemies can be compared

In the preface, the editor, Professor Heinrich Schenker, who Germans, says:

"Let the German nation, which is the most capable in the universe, and which is more richly endowed with talents and abilities than even the Greeks and Romans, ascend the steps of the throne; and let the so-called heathen religions in the steps of the throne; and let the so-called heathen religions in the so-called heathen rel ness and learn to appreciate it with Only the Germans are great and possess no faults. The French, the English, Italians, Russians and Americans have nothing but faults, according to Professor Schenker. Of the French he says that "they are deprived of all sincerity, of intelligence, of culture, fond to exaggeration of vague and meaningless phrases, who indulge in degenerate practices, and are most narrowmirded.'

As to the English, he says that their love for sports has deprived them completely of the religious sense, manners, artistic tastes and scientific spirit. "In spite of Shakespeare, Carlyle, Byron and some others, the English people are contemptible.'

The Italian, in the German's opinion, "is a bandit, a boaster, faithless, who has taken the motto of sacred egotism from the brigands, without inheriting their chivalrous

Of all, however, he finds for the Americans the most insulting names: "A crowd of storekeepe.'s without Kultur, whose mind cannot be excited except by the coarsest buffoonery. The country often boasted of unlimited possibilities, but in reality it is the country of most restricted possibilities, the country where the basest commercialism exclusively reigns and is accompanied by lack of Kultur, which results in impersonality, irreligion, laziness and the lack of the logical sense of which Wilson, Eliot and others have given proof. . . . In a word, that country where the ideas of Kultur and humanity are as remote from their true senses as whiskey is remote from the nectar of the Olym-

The Connecting Link.

Canada, despite all she had done in the war, is just beginning her job in this struggle and her destiny is to act as the connecting link between the people and Government of the United States and those of Britain.

Let me outline briefly four factors which I believe are leading naturally to this closer union. They are: Race, language, the type of democracy or government, and religion. Of the first it is needless to say much, for sumed the form of music text-books, their ancestral Anglo-Saxon affilia-Americans have always recognized tion with England—at least this is true of that large proportion sprung from the pioneers of English, Scotch and Irish, who settled here and developed the country. In respect to language, while the British Empire embraces peoples speaking over 100 different tongues, the dominating language, as here, is English, and from it we have our mutual interests in literature, thought and ideals. Britain and the United States are both democratic. Indeed, in one sense, Britain is more democratic garded as a great personality by the than the United States, for every department in its Government is more amenable to public opinion. In England since the outbreak of the war we have had two radical Governmental changes. On the sub-British Empire, its dominating faith ons understand its great- is Christianity, as it is in the United States. Here, then, is a fourfold bond of unity. These channels are already made, and what I ask, is lacking to bring these two nations closer together in sincerity and cordial understanding?

America can no longer go back to her old-time limitations of western hemisphere responsibility. By her entrance into the war she has assumed a responsibility for the peace of the world. The great problem of reconstruction, so well expressed by President Wilson, of making the world safe for democracy, will rest on the two great English-speaking nations. Since their entry into the war Americans are talking differently about world politics, and I have been impressed with the bigness and broad vision of America's leading men. America is already in the Council of Nations, and the voice of the American people demands that after the war something be done in determin-ing the destinies and fates of the civilized countries of the world, with due regard for the independence of national life. This responsibility does not end with the American shore, The principle of the Monroe doctrine will be enlarged, not abrogated, and Britain, as much as the United States, will have her share in enforcing that doctrine .- Major Charles W. He was captured at Ypres in June, 1916. During the strenuous fighting he assisted in carrying ammunition, but refrained from combatant work until he saw a wounded man on a stretcher fired upon. Then, casting aside Tolstoian ideas, he picked up a bayonet and rifle, and finally came to a hand struggle, using his fists. This led to the statement appearing in "Canada in Flanders" that he was killed. It the German camp where he was in terned Capt. Joseph Mayo, born in Langley, B.C., one hundred years and eight months ago, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. P. Hernandez, in Vancouver, recently. His father was a Hawaiian, the first to arrive on the coast of North America. In his early days Joseph Mayo followed trapping and hunting, and when the Hudson Bay Company established its fort at Langley, he assisted in its construction. The dead pioneer was one of the party that met the steamer Otter and the steamer Beaver when these vessels arrived at the fort with Governor Douglas, Rear Admiral Baynes and other distinguished visitors for the purpose of establishing the mainland capital.
