The defence is trying to prove that

Orchard was not at Wordner on the day of the explosion. The defence has been allowed to ask questions bringing out a story of disturbance at Cripple Creek during the strike of the miners there. The State has objected opening up this wide field but the defence persisted that it had the right to go deeply into this matter, in order that it may show what was done by the military and the provocation that was given to the striking miners. Today they will probably go into this further and show up the action of the Western Federation of Miners, whose leaders, the defence claims, were always on the side of peace and consistently against disturbances and riot.
