Saved From the Sea

"No," said Christine's husband, pulling his mustache to hide a smile; "and besides, one doesn't always know exactly who people are. Looks, too, as if she had got a will of her own—that handsome lady. Uncle Will, I think I'll follow your example still, and keep clear of matrimonial shoals."

"My boy, I hope to Heaven you will never keep clear of them for the same bitter reason I' "Uncle Will!"

"What else, then, do you call it, Falconer, when a woman engages herself to a man, lets him think his love is returned, fixes the marriage, and a fortunght before elopes with another lover, Captain Berenger? That is what Leonora Stanhope did."

"Uncle Will, you never before told me it was so bad as that," said the younger man, deeply touched and pained: "at least, not in detail."

"As you please, my dear—as you please. I dare not offer to escort you, you are so independent."
She laughed.

She laughed.
"Yes; always was so as a girl. I suppose that is why I took to taking care of other people for a calling. I've never been used to be taken care of, except"—her lips quivered for a second—"for two years. Ah! here we are at home."

The twelve o'clock post next day—or, rather, the same day—brought Falconer St. Maur a letter.

"Ah! from her! Wait, Rahmnee," he said, quickly. "It is from madame; you know what I told you this morning?"

"Yee saih!"

"Yes. sahib."
The few lines ran thus woman, loyal to honor and him, could speak at all, she answered it as if he had spoken in words. "Yes, darling, I know how hard it is such a mesh of iron chains. I fully understand now how you are involved, understand now how you are involved, and at least for the present I will not urge you to yield to my terms, nor will I yield to yours for your sake. If I lived with you again as I did before, it would be—and you know it, dearest one—to veil honor for love, principle for passion, and so strike with my own hand the death-blow to the very core of your strong, deep love, that has hitherto outlived all storms and temptations, however sometibes shadowed. You know well the absolute truth of Lovelace's noble sentiment, and that the key-note of your love for me, and its power in Heaven's mercy to save you, is the honor—the reverence, shall I dare say!—out of which all its harmonies and melodies have grown." and melodies have grown. Six hands that grab for raisins and for currants, and once more as emother making mincemeat as she used to do of yore.

I can hear her sweetly saying, "Now,
You children mustn't touch;
Not another raisin for you; you've already had too much."
I can see the almonds blanching in hot water at her side;
I can see the candied lemon peel, with sugar hard and dried;
I can see a hand now reaching for an-

I can see a hand now reaching for another raisin fine;
Yes, mother's making mincemeac, and thieving hand is mine. But I wake now from my dreaming, and I sit and sadly sigh, For the gray hair at my temple tells me time has travelled by, And the Christmas season nearing does not mean the self-same for there is no dear old mother, and there are no little boys

To shyly pilfer raisins as we used to do of yore,
When mother made her mincemeat, and our lives lay all before.

It's when another fellow does you up that you are apt to feel undone. Only One "BROMO QUININE," that is Laxative Bromo Quinine Cures a Cold in One Day, Grip in 2 Days
