

"Nothing Too Much."

BY RUTH CAMERON.

There is nothing more certain about the tastes and desires of the average human being than their uncertainty. Fickleness is the eternal law of human desire. Safety spoils more happiness than any other cause.

take a philosopher to appreciate these facts. You know them and I know them. Every grown man or woman has been taught them many times by his or her own experience. Why then, don't more of us live by them? Why don't we learn to regulate our pleasures with a view to prolonging them; in other words, why aren't we more careful not to get tired of the things we enjoy?

When I was in college I once learned a new game of cards just a few days before the semester examinations. It was a very interesting game and my roommate and I were fascinated by it and devoted every spare moment to it. But as anyone who has ever prepared for an important examination can imagine, these spare moments were few. Through the long, dull hours of grinding we looked forward to a half hour before bedtime in which we could play a few hands of our new game. And each time we rose reluctantly from the card table we would say defiantly, "Well, the day after examinations are over we will play all day long if we

I heard a business woman enthusiastically praise a certain delighted little luncheon place which she had discovered, and was therefore surprised when I saw her coming out of another restaurant one noon.

"How happens it that you didn't go to your favorite place?" I asked.

"Oh, I don't go there every day," she explained, "I like it too well to let myself get tired of it."

Wisdom like that is rare. Most of us spoil half our pleasures by running them into the ground. They say that if a horse gets at the food bin he will eat until he kills himself. Human beings don't often do that, but when the feed bin of any pleasure is left open to them, they frequently eat until they kill their desire for it.

"Nothing too much" was the motto of the most balanced and happiest nation the world ever knew. Self restraint even the matter of harmless pleasures is always its own reward.

FOR WOMEN ONLY.

That is the nature of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—the one remedy for women which contains no alcohol and no habit-forming drugs. Made from native medicinal forest roots. Dr. Pierce tells its every ingredient on the bottle wrapper. Prominent physicians and some of the best medical authorities endorse these ingredients as being the very best known remedies for ailments and weaknesses peculiar to women.

This is what MRS. GENNETT E. COFFEY, of Longstreet, Ky., says: "I feel it my duty to write and tell you what your medicines have done for me. I was a great sufferer for six years from a trouble peculiar to women, but I am thankful to say, after taking four bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription,' I am not bothered with that dreadful disease any more. I feel like a new woman. When I first wrote you for advice I only weighed 115 pounds—now I weigh 135. I thank you very much for your kindness. You have been as a father to me in advising me what to do, so may God bless you in every effort you put forth for good. I hope this testimonial will be the means of some poor suffering woman seeking health."

Federal Adviser, newly revised up-to-date edition, answers hosts of questions which every woman, single or married ought to know.

Ulster Warned to Obey the Law.

Dublin, May 17.—Considerable comment has been caused by the sermon preached by the Protestant Bishop of Ossory at the general synod of the Irish church before the leading clergy of the country. Although the Bishop's congregation was largely composed of those who openly advocate that home rule be opposed with armed force this church dignitary lectured his Ulster brethren upon the necessity of obeying the law.

"In the democratic constitution of modern states like our own," said the bishop, "the idea of the divine right of kings is not likely to be revived. For the law of the sovereign we have substituted—whether wisely or unwisely I do not now inquire—the law of the community. Law is no longer conceived as imposed by a superior upon his subjects; it is the expression of the will of the people. In those altered circumstances the precept, Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's resolves itself into the principle that it is the duty of good citizens to obey the law which they themselves have made.

Great Problem.

"And exactly here is the great problem of modern democracy?—how to preserve in the community a sense of the majesty of law, of the supreme value of its discipline, of the duty imposed upon each, of cheerful obedience for the sake of all. We cannot say that the problem has yet been solved; nor is it certain—I use the words of a thoughtful observer—that our social discipline is equal to the strain which is being put upon it by the ever increasing demands of the state upon individual citizens. The democracy has learned to make laws it is a harder thing to keep them; and the rendering of obedience demands higher moral qualities under democratic government than it did under the tyranny of the Caesars.

"I will give an illustration from the political controversies of our own time, readily as it might be done. But the tendency to resist the operation of law which we personally dislike and to adopt anarchistic methods to express our disapproval, is one of the most dangerous tendencies of democracy in the twentieth century; and it displays itself in many quarters. Demos is now the Caesar whom we have enthroned; and while we live under Caesar's rule, if we are to render unto Caesar the things that are his, we must learn, one and all, even if it hurts us, to obey, until they are changed, the laws which have been made by the people for the people."

This is a blow from an altogether unexpected quarter at the followers of Sir Edward Carson who declares that "Ulster will run with blood" if home rule is established in Ireland.

Asks for Central Body

To Advise on Imperial Finance. London, May 15.—The interesting suggestion was made by Premier Watt, of Victoria, yesterday, that some "organism" should be established in the Imperial Government which would interest itself in the finances of the Overseas Dominions and give advice to help the ministers who came to London for assistance.

Mr. Watt did not want it to be understood that he was complaining of how financial London had treated any of the Dominions. Australia had obtained singularly favorable terms in the past, but all the same it did appear to him that when a representative of a Dominion came to the Mother Country he should be placed in touch with some organism that would guide and help him in the discharge of his public and financial trust before, if necessary, he saw any of the private financiers in London.

If some small central body could

Unbandage The Eyes of Justice.

A recent editorial of the Saturday Evening Post, refers to the case of Andrew Toth, proven innocent of murder twenty years after a life sentence to the penitentiary.

The writer suggests the crying need of legislation which will provide redress and at least financial restitution to such unfortunate as Toth. But while we are at it, why not go a step farther and crusade for a still broader justice?

A few weeks ago a New York attorney, disbarred from practice for alleged misdemeanors, was shown guilty of the charges upon which he had been deprived of livelihood, honor, friends and name.

It was not only the blindness of justice which wrecked this life, but the open-eyed conspiracy of a powerful corporation revenging itself upon an honest lawyer successfully prosecuting the damage suit of an injured child.

Time, the great solvent of lies, at last exposed the details of the vile plot. Documents, as well as confessions, established the fact that a great railway company was responsible for this outrage and that its officials endorsed the acts of the directly responsible subordinates.

Now, a broken, haggard, empty-hearted old young man is "generously" permitted by the community to take up his work where "Justice" some twelve years ago, checked his activities.

Aside from the restoration of respectability, restitution comes to him empty-handed.

His parents dead, poisoned with humiliation at the disgrace of their son—his fortune dissipated in the fight to cleanse away the stain—his sweetheart married to another man within a few months after jilting him, without the benefit of doubt—yet law, as it stands, denies this man compensation of any sort, simply because the acts of oppression and conspiracy committed against him occurred twelve years ago, and under the statute of limitations, even the perpetrators of such a crime are absolved from punishment.

What a parody upon the liberty of republics in this electric-lighted Year of Our Lord, 1913.—Herbert Kauffman in the Woman's World for June.

St. Vincent De Paul.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' St. Vincent de Paul Society was held in the British Hall, Thursday, April 24th. The following officers were re-elected for the ensuing year:—

President—Mrs. D. J. Greene, V. P.—Mrs. T. Fitzgibbon. Treasurer—Mrs. V. P. Burke. Secretary—Miss Alice P. Deady. Committee—Mrs. J. J. O'Reilly, Mrs. Burnham, Mrs. Parker, Mrs. A. A. Devine, Miss M. O'Driscoll, Mrs. A. Hiscock, Mrs. A. Kavanagh, Mrs. J. V. O'Dea.

be created on which the Imperial Prime Minister and Foreign and Colonial Secretaries for the time being would serve along with the representatives of the Ministry of the day in each of the self-governing Dominions. It seemed to Premier Watt that the great democracies concerned might be induced to place in its hands the momentous issues of war, peace and neutrality. If this development of a new organism to perform this most important function ever took place, every war would be an Imperial war in reality, as well as an attempt to keep outside it would ever arise in any of the political entities whose representatives had agreed to its formation.

A REAL EIGHTH WONDER

Just for one moment consider what it means to go from Halifax to Vancouver in an automobile—the terrible uncertainty of road conditions, the absence of efficient route maps, the barriers to progress which have to be overcome—and you will agree with us that tires which could weather such a trip must, indeed, be marvellous wear-resisters.

Understand, the pathfinder party had no representation from the Dunlop Company. Our tires were in other hands. Also note that neither of the two gentlemen who made the trip have any specific knowledge about tires. There was no way not only of making it easy for the tires but of giving them aids to completing the journey. The mention of these all-important facts only accentuate that much more the Dunlop Traction Tread tires fit every rim
