Italian Submarine Rises After 70 Hours Spent on Bottom.

Milan, via Chiasso, Aug. 24.—Without food, without light, their supply of oxygen rapidly diminishing, their commander and two of their comrades dead, the crew of an Italian submarine laboured for seventy hours on the bed of the Adriatic to repair the machinery of their craft, set the engines in motion and in the end reached their base.

This is the tale of heroism that has sent a wave of enthusiasm over the country.

A week ago an official statement from Vienna said an Austrian submarine had torpedoed and sunk the Neride, one of Italy's newer submarines. The Neride failed to return to her base and the ministry of marine was inclined to accept the Austrian statement as true and to place the craft and her crew on the navy's casualty list.

In the meantime one of the romances of the war, to which the submarine has contributed so much, was being enacted fathoms deep on the bottom of the sea.

The Neride was attacked by an Austrian craft, as Vienna told. The Neride's commander, however, had distinguished the wake of the torpedo speeding toward him and swung the diver lever hard. The Neride responded to the action of her rudders so quickly that the torpedo passed just above her, but the strain on her mechanism was so great that when she was brought again to the horizontal it was found her motors were out of commission.

Feverishly the crew sought to repair the damage. The failure of the motors threw the weight of the current used by the electric bulbs on to the storage batteries and these soon became exhausted. The men redoubled their efforts in the dark. With the exhaustion of the reserve store of electricity the ventilating apparatus failed. Thirty men were trapped, but despite their apparently hopeless situation their courage never faltered and their efforts to repair their craft's driving machinery never failed.

Hour after hour, in the stifling, brain-bursting interior of the submarine, without sleep, without rest, they worked under the inspiration of their commander's faith. Then the thickening fumes took their toll of him and a subordinate directed the work. The men lost trace of time. Once they obtained a few revolutions of the screw and a faint, husky cheer used up more of the precious oxygen. But their exhilaration was brief for the motors stopped again and the work had all to be done over.

Two more men collapsed and were barely kept alive when the chief engineer, exploring with blind fingers, found the seat of trouble and at length repaired it. The motors started once more. Slowly the shell began to rise from the bottom. The periscope reached the surface and found a clear sea. Out from the water came the hull, and the hatch of the conning tower was opened for the first breath of fresh air in three long days. But it was too late for the three men in collapse below. They died without regaining consciousness. Two more men died on their way to port.

Obtaining his bearings, the navigator steered his course for the base on the Adriatic coast, and yesterday, the Neride, running awash, appeared among her flotilla, a ghost from the sea. The news was flashed to Rome and to the naval ships aloft:

"The Neride, sunk, is risen again."

SHABBY GENTLE.

How poignant is the lot of those who would conceal financial woes, and try to make their neighbors think their fortunes are not on the blink! They live on crusts and cabbage soup, and have no comforts in their camp, they have to save and skimp and pinch, still slipping backward inch by inch; in want's hard lessons they are schooled—and think they have the neighbors fooled! Their front is brave, but all in vain; in vain the pinching, and the pain that's sharper than a serpent's tooth—the neighbors always know the truth. The neighbors say, "They are so poor the morrow's grub is never sure, and yet you'd think them millionaires, the way they put on foolish airs. They are so proud that they would die before they'd take an offered pie, or we would send them things to eat—they'd throw such handouts in the street." How happy are the abject drones, who huddle round their empty stores, and make no secret of their grief. But loudly clamor for relief, compared with haughty folks like these, who try to gild their miseries!
