THE COLOUR QUESTION.

GENEVA, Nov. 30. Addressing the Assembly of League of Nations to-day, Viscount Ishii, head of the Japanese delegation referred to the position taken by the Japanese delegation at the Peace Conference. "It was to the poignant regret of the Japanese Government and people," he said, "that the framers of the Covenant were unable to accept the Japanese proposal that equality before the law should be assured to all men, irrespective of their nationality, race or religion. The Japanese delegates declared they would continue their insistence for the adoption of their just demand by the League."

IMPROMPTU CONCERT.—On the last trip of the Rosalind from this port to New York, an impromptu concert was held in the ship's saloon. Mr. J. M. Devine presided and a programme of songs, recitations, etc., was rendered. At the close a collection was taken up and the sum of $12.50, which will be devoted to Grenfell Mission for sailors, was realized.

JOHN H. BERNIS, of Cincinnati, Ohio, who says his wonderful restoration to health since taking Tanlac has astonished all his friends, has gained twenty pounds.

"My friends are all astonished over my wonderful restoration to health since taking Tanlac," said John H. Bernis, of 308 East Front St., Cincinnati, Ohio, recently.

"I don't know what it is, but there is something about Tanlac that certainly does the work," he said, "and I firmly believe if it hadn't been for this medicine I wouldn't be here now. I completely restored my health and I have gained twenty pounds besides. I have a splendid appetite now, and can eat anything I want without being troubled in the least afterwards."

"Before taking Tanlac my health was dreadfully rundown. My main trouble was indigestion, and I suffered miserably night and day. I never seemed hungry, and the little I ate upset my stomach. I was nervous and couldn't get a good night's sleep. I lost thirty-four pounds and was going down hill rapidly. It seemed like the more medicine I took the worse I got."

"But since taking Tanlac I am like a brand-new man. I sleep like a farm hand all night and feel just fine all day. In fact, I'm a perfectly well man once more. Tanlac certainly beats anything I ever saw in my life."

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors, in Paradise by Mrs. Martin F. Byrne, in Upper Gillies by Heber Andrews, in Portland by H. C. Haines, in St. Joseph, Salmonier, by Mrs. J. Gushue, in Millertown by Exploit Valley Royal Stores, Ltd., in Flat Island by William Samson, in Jamestown by Christopher Haines, and in Lewisporte by Uriah Freake.—adv.

The Mon Who Won the War!

Amidst the most solemn ceremonies, and with the most loving care, he who henceforth is to symbolize the heroic qualities of the British race has received his place in the hierarchy of the departed great. The Unknown Warrior, taken from the bosom of the battlefields, where his blood literally germinated victory, has been laid to rest in Westminster Abbey. There he will sleep, surrounded by the Royal and the noble, who for centuries made the history of England. Close by, too, lie the wondrous galaxy of those who, in politics, in the professions of art, and in literature, won in their day the supreme favour of their country. Famous generals are gathered there, whose names will always leap to mind as memory ranges over the achievements of British arms. But amidst all the pomp and grandeur of marble, gilt, and bronze, recording wondrous deeds and immortal names, one tomb will henceforth overshadow all in the volume of affection it will attract. That tomb will be the abiding-place of the first British warrior to enter the portals of the Abbey from the lowest ranks, there to make his last earthly home, just as if he had commanded armies, and fame had blazoned his name to the ends of the earth. By that spot the clamour of self-seeking arrogance competing for laurels will be silenced. By that holy shrine contention will sound afar off, like echoes, indeed, from another age, for here will proud and humble recognize the true Mark of Destiny, the man who, beyond all dispute, won the war, and rescued the land from the greatest peril in its history. It was in this reverent spirit of appreciation and of gratitude that the King and Parliament, the Navy, the Army, and the people combined to do honour to the gallant Unknown. Unknown only in a sense; for in another sense, larger and more profound, we all know him as the typical son of the British race, simple, brave, and steadfast, whose qualities have created the matchless fabric of the British Empire. Other wars may have been won by the generals; this war, in a special manner, was won by the people. It was won not only by the incomparable men who endured the unimaginable horrors of the battlefield, but by their friends at home, their fathers, mothers, wives, and children, who, with breaking hearts but wills of steel, suffered without flinching to the end. To these homely sacrifices, no less than to the lustre of the fighting soldier, the wreaths piled round the Cenotaph, and the Abbey ceremonial, must be interpreted as expressions of national homage. The coming of the Unknown straight from the battlefield to the heart of the Empire, should kindle a spiritual flame for the clearer illumination of the past and the present. In the two years that have elapsed since the Armistice, the nation has passed through a veritable sea of difficulties, always finding safety ultimately through the god sense and spirit of fairness of the community. It is not surprising that after the prolonged burden of war, and the strain of social, economic, and industrial troubles that formed the inevitable sequel to the European struggle, the exalted faith that a little while ago moved mountains, should now begin to languish. By recalling the terrible past, the advent of the Unknown should serve to bring home to us the splendour of our opportunities in the present. There is much to be done, grievances to be redressed, reforms to be carried, innovations to be introduced, but the Britain from which the Unknown Warrior sprang is capable of prodigies. To him she is indebted for the opportunities which to-day are hers, opportunities which make her the envy of the nations.—News of the World.
