The Export of Fish.

LOCAL VESSELS CHEAPEST IN LONG RUN.

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir,—I am glad to see that your paper is still open for the public to discuss the best means for marketing our fish. As I have on several occasions expressed my views on this matter, I have no intention of repeating what I have already said, apart from saying that I was one of a committee that recommended the exporting of our fish by local tonnage, and employing our own people for that work, and the Prime Minister was asked to tax all exporters who would engage foreign bottoms twenty cents per qt. over local vessels. With that request, the Prime Minister complied, and made the announcement in his budget speech. But immediately the exporters met, and a resolution was passed asking for the repeal of the twenty cents and putting all foreign steamers on a par with our local tonnage and foreign sailing vessels ten cents over. I would also point out some of the arguments that were used against our local tonnage. Notably it was said our vessels were too large. One of our representatives said in the House we wanted vessels that could carry from twenty-five hundred to three thousand quintals, and to show how inconsistent that argument was, never in the history of this country has our fish been shipped in such large quantities as it was this year; not only have steamers been taking from twenty to thirty thousand quintals at a time, but ten of our large sailing vessels on the Labrador have sailed with an average of fifty-nine hundred each. Another and very forcible argument that was used was that the foreign steamers would take it across for less freight and less insurance. And a few days ago an ex-soldier and charterer of foreign steamers said that on that account they could pay a larger sum to the fishermen, who caught the fish. Let us consider these last words for a few minutes and see if they are borne out by facts. Yesterday I was told on good authority that a very large portion of the fish sent across the last month had gone over on consignment, carried across by foreigners, put in the cold storage of foreigners, and now the price of Labrador has dropped to thirty shillings per quintal. A month ago Labrador was sold for forty shillings; now it can be bought for four dollars. But that is not the worst feature. Every day that fish remains in cold storage the owner is losing money and the last state is worse than the first. Last year under the fish regulations, shipper were complaining that the demurrage was going on every day making the fish of less value every hour, but the fish was in our own vessels, and the demurrage would come back to be spent in the country. But this year it is in the hands of the owners of the cold storage plants, and the longer it stays there the less it will be worth to the exporter. Therefore, to my mind, it can easily be seen that what has been saved on the cheap rate of freight and insurance will be lost on cold storage.

I said in one of my letters that I hoped an abler pen than mine would take up this matter. At last the hour has come, and the man to champion the cause of local industry has appeared in the person of Mr. P. E. Outerbridge. In commenting on our local Canadian Banks built here, Mr. Outerbridge says if they and similar outside corporations established in St. John's are not prepared to employ Newfoundlanders as a small part of reciprocity, tax them ten per cent. of the bill of every foreign tradesman or contractor they import. Again he says as soon as times improve a little, there will be further buildings going on by outside firms established here for money making purposes, and if these outsiders are not prepared to employ Newfoundland labor of every kind, tax them to the hilt for every foreign contractor, builder, carpenter or plumber they import. But why Mr. Outerbridge should expect outsiders to do for us what we are not prepared to do for ourselves, I am at a loss to know. There is no doubt but he is in earnest on the matter, for in his last paragraph he says, I am strong for the reduction of Taxation and the obtaining of additional Revenue by taxing outside firms who are making money out of the Colony. One can see at a glance that the good that can come to us by way of Revenue from any buildings that we can hope to see put up here for the next ten years is no more than a drop in a bucket, compared to the hundreds of thousands of dollars that would come to us by using our local tonnage for our export and import trade; and now that this has been called to Mr. Outerbridge's notice we should like to hear his opinion on this most important matter, otherwise he may be compared to the man who would strain at a gnat but swallow a camel. Much more can be said on this matter, but it is too late now to effect a remedy for this season. But let us hope that we shall profit another year by the mistakes we made this year.

Yours truly,
A. KEAN.

Dust-Heap Discovery.

Until recently the dust discharged from blast factories was looked upon as useless refuse, and was discarded as such. To-day it is one of the most productive sources of a much-needed chemical.

During the war Mr. Kenneth M. Chance, a distinguished chemist, sought a new means of securing potash, the supply of which had been cut off from Germany. He began to experiment with the dust from blast-furnaces, and discovered a process by which potash could be manufactured from it.

Later he discovered a chlorine process which increased the output of permanganate of potash by fifty per cent.

Before the war we relied upon persons abroad, who made potash and exported it to us.

Secrets of the Ku-Klux-Klan.

Ku-Klux-Klan! The words cause shudders of fear among all—men, women, and children—in the Southern and Western States of America.

For months now there has been a veritable reign of terror, carried on ruthlessly and with baffling secrecy by bands of white-robed and hooded night-riders.

Scores of men and women have been kidnapped, carried by force to lonely spots, and beaten, tarred-and-feathered, and even shot and hanged by masked men wearing the white robes and hoods of the most mysterious, most powerful, and most dreaded secret society in the world—the Ku-Klux-Klan.

A Beautiful "Queen."

Now comes the startling admission, on the part of a young and beautiful woman, that she is the ruler, the Queen, of this weird Order.

Elizabeth Tyler is a married woman who has just come to the fore as the most mysterious and awe-inspiring figure in the sinister secret society which is now known as the "Invisible Empire" of America.

Small and dainty, with a wealth of fair hair, keen blue eyes, and attractive features, Mrs. Tyler seems essentially feminine, and the first question one asks is: "Does this kindly-faced woman really direct the hangings, shootings, and kidnappings which have been alleged against the white-robed members of this mysterious Order?"

Whatever the answer to that question, she made, a few days ago, a significant utterance: "I am the Ku-Klux-Klan!"

Who is Elizabeth Tyler? Until comparatively recently she was unknown and lived in a small town in a quiet, unostentatious way. But for her meeting with Colonel Simmons, the Imperial Wizard of the dreaded Klan, she might have remained in obscurity. Instead, she is who now moulds the fate of thousands of people and holds sway over more than half a million loyal followers.

150,000 women and girls have recently been enrolled under the banner of the Ku-Klux-Klan, and that it is now the most powerful secret society in the world.

Mrs. Tyler decided to include women and girls in the Klan for a number of reasons, the chief being that she believed feminine support would help considerably in enrolling more men in the ranks.

What is this dread secret society? The Ku-Klux-Klan was started by a number of young men in 1865. The object was to bring together Southern men who had served in the Civil War; its aim was the protection of white men against the blacks. It grew in size amazingly, and suddenly its activities ceased, and for years it lay dormant.

Then, in 1915, Colonel William Joseph Simmons took up the reins of dictatorship and set about bringing the Klan to life again.

Its objects were as before—the preservation of white domination—and success came quickly.

Fired with zeal, men flocked to its standard, pledging themselves to obey the commands of the Imperial Wizard, and to maintain the strictest secrecy. Failure to comply was punishable with dishonour, disgrace, and death.

The Klan had now gained a firm hold throughout America. Nearly half a million men had taken the oath of allegiance. Then another phase of activity was entered upon. Abductions, secret trials, tarings, featherings, and other outrages became more frequent. Upon the scene there now appeared a new invisible force—a dominating personality whose vigour put fresh life and energy into the society. This was Mrs. Tyler, the new "power behind the throne."

What is the secret of Mrs. Tyler's power? No one knows. Until a few weeks ago even her identity was unknown. Did she, it is asked, have some influence over Simmons, the Imperial Wizard—some hold which forced him to yield to her every whim and wish?

The Klan Denounced.

At any rate, whatever prompted this beautiful ruler of the world's most dreaded secret society in her pursuit of power, she has very quickly become the absolute dictator, pulling the strings behind the scenes while the Imperial Wizard remains the mere figure-head.

Undoubtedly a woman of abounding energy, she at once set about remodeling the Klan, whose silent and mysterious doings were growing in number and becoming more startling in character.

Her first big step was the enrolling of women and girls. In turn these girls were used as canvassers, and so the society grew, and is still growing.

Endorsed.

"I want this cheque cashed, please. My husband sent it me; he is away on business," said the fair young wife at the bank counter. "Quite so, madam," replied the cashier, "but you must first endorse it, that is, sign it on the back, you know." The beaming wife went to a desk against a wall, and in a few moments presented the cheque, triumphant, having inscribed on its back: "Your loving wife, Edith."—Morning Post.
