Elsie was silent. This kind of silent devotion did not commend itself to her in her present mood.

"Why not have written to me?" she said to herself; "that would have made me happier than watching the house."

"One night," continued Owen, "I was very hungry—I was very poor; I had paid my month's rent of two pounds the day before. My whole month's income was less than four guineas, and I had only five shillings remaining; that was the sum I had to depend upon for a whole week. I had made up my mind to sup on a stale bun and a draught of water. Just as I got to the street door of my chambers I saw somebody pass out; the light of the lamp fell on a young fellow named Clifton, an artist, who illustrates some of the magazines when he can get an order—but he is fonder of cigars than of his pencil, and he likes bitter and billiards better than study, so that he is poor but he is glaways in capital spirits.

So I agreed to go to the Shadow; but first I ran upstairs to wash and brush, and to change my shabby coat for one a few degrees less dingy. As I pased under the gas-jet that is kept alight all the evening on the general staircase. I saw something gliston. kept alight all the evening on the general staircase, I saw something glistening on the old oldolth. I picked it up, and found a crimson stone, extremely bright, cut in the form of a seal; but there was no setting—the gold had been melted away from it, and the engraving was so scratched and defaced that one could not see what it was like. When we got into my garret at the top I lighted my lamp and examined the thing more carefully. Clifton also looked at it.

made myself clean, and I put the theater. I forgot what a hard share of the world had fallen to my lot when once I found myself on a soft velvet chair in the stalks, and the fun began. "I laughed at the wit, and the way in which the mask came off the folks who assumed perfection as the motto; it was good fun. After it was over Clifton, who was in cash that night, and who is one of the most good-natured of Bo-hemians, would make me go with him to the grill-room, and allow him to treat me to a chop, potatoes and claret. I had often treated him, and lent him money, which he never was able to return, so I accepted his kindness.

"While we were at supper a gay party of distinguished looking ladies came in. of distinguished looking ladies came in. me, and the others began to scan me, so that I felt very uncomfortable. Clifton recognized the gentleman as being Captain Bracegirdle. He said that he had cardtables at his house in Montague Place, where great sums changed hands; he said that he meant to go there whenever he had five pounds to lose."

"There!" cried Elsie. "Do you think well now of that Miss Bracegirdle?"

"No, my Elsie; not now that I have heard the truth from you. Well, I went home, and the next morning I looked at the red stone by daylight, and I felt sure that it was a ruby. You know that there are some wonderful rubies in the Chase family. You have heard that whoever murdered Lord Hammond tried to get his watch, but only succeeded in breaking off a valuable ruby seal. All that was in the papers. I had heard all that, but I never thought of the seal described as set heavily in massive gold and engraved with the crest and motto of the Earls of Chase. The engraving was scratched and scraned away the addition was the paper and way the addition was the paper and way the addition was serial and motto of the Earls of Chase. The engraving was scratched and scraped away, the setting was gone. I supposed that some of the other tenants in the Foresters' Chambers must have dropped this stone on the stairs, and I went to all the doors on each flat and asked if anybody had lost a stone. All the people were honest, and said they had not, except one old lady, with greedy eyes, who lived penuriously en a good income in the story below mine. She said she had lost a fine stone, and when I asked her to describe it, declared it was a diamond of great value and beauty. I told her I had found no diamond; and then I took the stone to Mapleson's—a jeweler I knew in Oxford street. He said that it was a ruby of great value, but he said he should take it to a firm in St. Martin's Lane, who were experts in gems, and he would get it valued.

"I meant, when I knew the value, to advertise the ruby, and to demand a couple of sovereigns or so in payment for the trouble I had taken. I was hungry, and I wanted good food, so that I might have strength to work and study more. I left the ruby with Mapleson. I was to have gone to him yesterday to hear what the experts said about the stone.

"'Lock the door, said he, 'and I will tell you."

"Alake haste, I said. I want to get to sleep, I have worked hard, I have had no dinner, and I mean to take it out in sleep. Qui dort dine—who sleeps eats, as the French say.

"Don't make bad fokes." answered Clifton. 'My boy, I have found you out. You are a sort of lord in disguise, as we all thought you were, and your name is no more Scott than mine is Jones. Your name is Owen Hammond—your father was the Honorable Richard Hammond, and your uncle is the Earl of Chase. You are a good, noble fellow."

"I will tell you in his own words. Clifton told me the following story:

The C. P. R. May Control the Kingston and Pembroke--Rumor That Hays Is Coming Back to the G. T. R .---Contest for Control of the N. P.

A GRAND TRUNK RUMOR.

Chicago, Nov. 14.-The Chronicle this morning says: "It is reported that C. M. Hays, who recently resigned the presidency of the Southern Pacific, is or a moment."

"But let me tell you how this last horrible thing happened. Miss Brace-girdle has visited me in my garret; she has sat to me in costume as Lady Jane Grey on her way to the scaffold; she told me news of all my old acquaintance; she told me where you were, but I did not she told me where you were. But I did not she told me where you were y to be elected president and general about a year ago. Mr. Hays is now in England, conferring, it is said, with the owners of the road."

THE G. T. AND S. S. DISPUTE. Montreal, Nov. 14 .- Victor Geoffrion, M. P. for Chambly-Vercheres, presented a petition to the minister of railbearing on the dispute between the South Shore Railway and the Grand Trunk, as the result of which the latter road has shut the South Shore out of its traffic arrangement over the Victoria bridge into Montreal. The petition, which is signed by many people of the interested districts, points out that the new bridge was partly constructed out of federal moneys, and it is a great injustice to the counties interested thus to be cut off from communication with the me-

Both gentlemen are reported, while in New York, of taking an important part in the meetings regardsettlement of the Northern Pacific Railway deal, and as a result of which the Canadian road is expected to profit materially. This is explained in some quarters as having a great deal to do with the present buoyancy in the price of Canadian Pacific stock. The sale of over 34,000 shares in Wall street yesterday is regarded as significant, being coincident with the presence in that city of Lord Strathcona and Sir William Van

CONTROL OF THE N. P. New York, Nov. 14.-There were two important developments in the rail-way situation in the Northwest Tuesday, and both tended to confirm the existing belief that a final basis of the settlemest of the contest for the control of N. Final ratification of this agreewill bring into existence the greatest and most effective example of the community of interest idea as applied to the railroad systems of the country. No official this statement was obtainable afternoon as to the scope of the newly incorporated Northern Securities Company, but it was generally understood that the company was formed to take over and control the shares of the N. P. and the Great Northern Railways and of their leased lines. The Great Northern's outstanding capital is $125,000,000, par value, selling at 100 in the market, while Northern Pacific's total outstanding stock, after the retirement of the preferred, will be $80,-000,000 par value, making a total of $205,000,000, par value, for the shares of those two companies. At 200 for Great Northern, the amount would be increased to $330,000,000 for the shares of the two companies.

Burlington shares, it is understood, are not to be turned over to the new Northern Securities Company. That stock is now held as collateral for the outstanding Burlington collateral bonds, with voting rights vested in the N. P. and Great Northern Railways. It is understood that U.
