"That would make the snuggest, driest, warmest home we ever have had, excepting that time when we lived in Farmer Brown's barn," said Nanny. "No one would ever think of looking for us in there. And it wouldn't do them any good if they did. Perhaps something has hap-pened to that man-bird. Perhaps it can't fly any more. I hope it can't.

If it can't we'll move over there. Oh, I do hope it can't fly!"

Danny said nothing, but he chuckled to himself. He was too wise to suggest that they move over there at once. He was satisfied to wait. Perhaps the thing Nanny hoped might be true. Perhaps that man-bird was to be left there. Danny would have liked nothing better than to make his home (Copyright, 1923, by T. W. Burgess.)
