A History of His Illness leadership took place, the first symptoms of disease made their appearance in a partial loss of speech, followed by loss of power.

Alexander Mackenzie.

Not in the flush of unripe early youth.

The golden blossom-time of menions. disease made their appearance in a partial loss of speech, followed by loss of power in the left side. These symptoms did not improve, but rather steadily advanced, the infirmity of speech increasing in its severity. Mr. Mackenzie, however, was able to attend parliament and to his other duties until Feb. 2, 1892. When about to enter his carriage to go to his office he fell and was carried into the house, when it was found that the loss of power and motion was complete on the left side, and to a lesser extent on the right side; also partial less of sensation. His articulation because more indistinct and difficult to understand. He seemed to improve somewhat occasionally until about four weeks ago, when his mind because impaired, but he would answer questions correctly occasionally.

Division the flush of unity occasionally.

Not in the flush of unity occasion; The golden blossom: time of many powers, But in the silvery shadow-less'ning hours of waning autumn-tide, the chieved she still down his weary, burdened head to rest. Long since the quarry felt the chisel stroke, Long since the mallet ringing nobly woke Thro' caverns ancient, granite words of truth; Whilst echoes exiled oft are heard as clear As when they wakened nobly at his task The splendid note of life, "Sincerity." Constant in duty, fearless in the right, Mackenzie, manilke, spurned vile Mammon' mask,

The crown of petty demigods, whose light Fades in the fulsome fitness of their night. Vain, not of social place; nay, 'twas for thee, Great Commoner, the end of all things best his mind became impaired, out he would answer questions correctly occasionally. During a great portion of his illness to within a few days of his death he was able to take some food and enjoy it. The last week he took almost nothing of any kind of nourishment.

Mr. Mackenzie possessed wonderful viality, clinging to life as long as it was possible. His life was worn out, a case of pure

Generous Tributes Were Paid the Memory Rev. D. J. Macdonnell was informed of the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie's death just before entering the pulpit, and after the lessons entering the pulpit, and after the lessons appropriate to Easter had been read, spoke as follows:

"Before we pray, it is fitting to mention what has just been told me,—that the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie entered into rest at 12.40 this morning. This is not a surprise, for we long have known that he was sinking, and now that he has gone one must say a word, if only to thank God for the life thus smaded—the life of a good and true man, and of a great man; for he was true to his convictions, true even when adherence to convictions meant loss, and that is a rare virtue in public and private life. And he had ability of a high order which he gave without stint to the service of his and he had ability of the service of his gave without stint to the service of his country. Greatly beloved by his friends, private and public, he compelled the respect and admiration of opponents by his honor and integrity, as well as by his ability. THE FEELING IN OTTAWA.

The House Will Probably Remain Ad OTTAWA, April 17.—Owing to the absence of Mr. Abbott in Montreal it cannot be learned officially to-night what action the Government will take with reference to Mr. Mackenzie's death. When George Brown marching from all points of the compass, learned officially to-night what action the Government will take with reference to Mr. Mackenzie's death. When George Brown died the Government offered a State funeral, which was declined by friends. It is hardly possible any action in that direction can be taken on this occasion, as the funeral is fixed for such an early date. It is most probable, however, that the House, which now stands adjourned until Tuesday, will only meet pro forma on that day and adjourn, so that members now absent and
