LORA: The Major's Daughter

And then they sat together and talked of matters that were very remote from their thoughts, and as they talked their eyes met tenderly with a searching, longing look, as if they were looking for a single ray of that happiness which had once shone for them. It was so very quiet up here that nothing disturbed them in the questions and answers that at first came quickly, and then more and more slowly.

The general seemed to-day to have forgotten the dinner hour. General tripping about on tiptoe, had noisily laid the table and brought in the soup.

Lora asked Ernest in a few hasty words to stay. They sat opposite each other like a married couple at their first dinner; possibly the comparison may have suggested itself to them both. For one moment her eyes met his, full of all the old faithful affection; then she suddenly turned her head away, and two great tears ran down her face.

They did not speak much during the little meal.

"To our good friends," he said, "I am, touching his glass to hers. Then he asked her if she would not go to walk, and as she hesitated he conducted her through the streets of Rome, and she thought how she had once dreamed of wandering here with him like this, and that it had now come to pass, and how differently!

It was dusk when he left her at her own door. "Good-night, Lora, and thank you," he said.

"Good-night," she said.

"And 'wiedersehen,'" he asked.

"Yes."

"To-morrow?"

"Yes."

Upstairs her uncle was waiting and crumpling at his absence.

"By Jove, child, you have stayed out long enough!"

She stood before him and looked at him, and the look showed him, her eyes were so full of tears.

"What has happened to you?" he asked. "You look like—"

"He did not know exactly what to say."

"Nothing particular. I have been taking a walk with my good friend."

"With the doctor, then?"

"Yes, uncle."

"No doubt you found it livelier than with your old uncle," said the general playfully. "A man like that has all the cheer of his fingers' ends, and can tell you where Nero had his shoes made, and where the lovely Agrippina brought her head-dress."

"Ah, uncle, we were not thinking about imperial Rome," she replied.

"So much the worse! What were you thinking about? Is that the way you improve your mind by travel?"

A few days went by, which she spent almost chiefly with them.

They went out together and took their meals together, but they did not once mention old Rome again. At length he came one evening to his good-by.

The general had taken cold during an excursion to Tivoli the day before and was in bed with rheumatism.

Japan Tea Drinkers WE SAY TO YOU

To Our Customers

We wish to announce to our many customers and to the public at large that on account of the reduction of the wholesale Cash Discount since we introduced our Cash Discount System, we will be obliged to stop giving Discount Cheques, commencing the First Day of January, 1902, and will continue to do so until further notice is given.

Our motto shall continue to be: "Small Profits and Quick Returns." We want to continue doing a Cash Business and will make it more interesting than ever to our patrons, would say that as we are quoting Granulated Sugar very low by the 100 lbs., or by the barrel, and now may be a good time to invest. Watch our special quotations from time to time.

Wishing you a Prosperous and Happy New Year.

Heiden had also written that she was very happy in her little home, and that she had exchanged into the country, and she was looking impatiently at the clock. They are running about down there in the fog, and will forget where they are, she said, with impatience, going to the window to peer out into the growing darkness.

They were coming up the garden-path, arm in arm, and she looked at the old-fashioned umbrella.

"The lady tripped to the door."

"How was I to know first before you go upstairs," she cried, "and I really must forbid your taking my umbrella on all occasions. I gave my boy a brand new one of silk for a wedding present. And her eyes sparkled as she spoke."

"Let us be," she said simply; "we got engaged under the old umbrella."

"Where have you been?" asked Frau Tolien.

"To the church-yard, mamma; we had not been there together before."

"A few days went by, which she spent almost chiefly with them."
