

"but it is less (d) to withdraw strong recommendations before their final report is submitted to the Minister.
The Minister may then accept or reject the recommendations and may make any changes he sees fit. In this way, the Minister can take into account any new information which may have come to light since the recommendations were made. The Minister may also choose to withdraw his recommendations if he does not consider them to be in the public interest."

December, 1971

and should be given to the Minister as soon as possible. It is important that the Minister receives the report as soon as possible so that he can make a decision on it without delay.

National Parole Service - Field Organization

