2. Equally suited for employment in Command or on the General Staff:
of the Quartermaster General's : or Adjutant General's branches of the Staff.

3. Report. An officer of exceptional attainments, with immense powers of concentration, and great strength of character.

He has wide general knowledge, and brings a highly trained, scientific mind to bear on all military problems. His training and experience as a soldier, combined with his knowledge as an engineer, are calculated to make for great efficiency as a Commander or Staff Officer under conditions of modern warfare.

Much of the work which he has done at the Staff College has been new to him, but in every particular he has more than held his own.

He has good tactical ability, and as a scientific gunner, he is quite outstanding. He has a good knowledge of staff duties. He expresses himself with conviction, both verbally, and on paper.

He is tactful, and has a good manner, in which the intensesness of the man is evident. Strong and has a great capacity for hard work. As the senior officer of the course he has been a very fine example.
