

J. W. R.

being Agriculture Schools instead of Agriculture Colleges, and that they are considered necessary even in the neighbourhood of such an outstanding agricultural University as Cornell.

I really feel that I must apologize for inflicting my views on you at such length. I am afraid, too, that you may think me too dogmatic, which I do not desire to be. I am merely giving my views as they gradually develop, in the hope that you may find something in them of a little value.

Sincerely yours,

A handwritten signature in dark ink, appearing to read "J. W. R. Macaulay". The signature is written in a cursive style with a horizontal line underlining the name "Macaulay".

TBM/WM.

Prospectuses accompany this letter.