

Whoever makes himself familiar with the history of Harrison, and the personnel of his army, citizens of Ohio, Kentucky, and Indiana, including one or two of the regular army, will be surprised to learn the number of great and conspicuous men found in its ranks. Two of the future presidents* of the republic, while a third became the public prosecutor of the unhappy general, the surrenderer of Detroit; one vice-president, many senators, a great many representatives in Congress; several foreign ministers; governors of states and territories; judges, national and state, with quite innumerable members of state legislatures. In the later years, to have served with Harrison against Tecumseh and Proctor, was in Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Illinois, an honor only second to service in the war of the Revolution.
