

the Tenants on the real Rents, or on the just value of the Lands, if possessed by the Proprietors.

To regulate the Provision for the Clergy, and to make their yearly Stipends payable in Money, in proportion to the real Rents or value of the Lands.

To limit the Size of Farms, in order the more to increase Population, and encourage Agriculture.

To alter and amend the Marriage-Act for the like salutary purposes.

To take off such of the present Taxes on the Necessaries of Life, as affect the poor and industrious part of the Nation, and in lieu thereof, to tax Batchelors, Domestick Servants, Horses and Dogs.

To take off the Excise on Provisions, and in lieu of it, to lay a Tax on all Doors and Chimneys of the Houses of the Inhabitants, in order that the poorer Sorts of the People, who cannot afford to be well lodged, may at