

hand the first man in a native battle . . . which I witnessed At last having attempted to murder another native, he was shot through the heart . . . so there died."

Mr. Maning was never again molested, and making full allowance for their foibles, speaks with a very tender love for that race of warriors.