Military Drill and Physical Training
Judging by the numerous enquiries being received by the local secretary of the Summer School of Science at Fredericton, respecting the courses to be given in these two subjects during the coming summer, it appears that some confusion regarding them exists in the minds of many teachers. The course in military drill is for males only, and is open to teachers or prospective teachers who wish to qualify themselves for the organization and instruction of cadet corps. The course lasts six weeks and takes up the whole time of these winter upon it.
The course in physical training is open to teachers of both sexes, and consists approximately of thirty lessons of one hour each, spread over three weeks. At the conclusion of the course, a certificate is granted by the militia department. The chief superintendent of education and

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

PART II.
SHOULD A GIRL TELL A MAN?
DON'T you think the woman who goes to a man without confessing runs a greater risk of losing him after the marriage than if she had told him everything? If a man couldn't forgive then, he surely couldn't when he found he had been deceived and he would surely find it out.
"I am a woman with something to confess. I came to the city alone when I was seventeen, believing in the same moral standard for men and women, and that a high one. I was thrown much in contact with a certain college student, and in time came to care very much for him. We had the usual student understanding that when through college, if we still cared, we would be married." Follows a pitiful story of a man playing on a woman's affection for him and fear for his physical safety to work her downfall, and then "We were separated soon after this and I no longer hear from him as can be expected."
"Every cloud has a silver lining." I've been telling you about my cloud and now I want to show you its lining. I believe I am a bigger, nobler woman than I would have been. I used to pass over suffering lightly, I cannot now. But most of all my heart goes out to the woman who has fallen. Now I know that if a man loves a girl he will protect her even against himself, and because I know the horror of the one kind of love which many mistake for the real and beautiful. I want to be a keener appreciation of the real and beautiful. I want to be worthy of being the mother of my husband's children and when temptation comes my way I think of that and it helps me.

"It isn't the losing of one battle that loses a country the war. It is giving up the fight and it's just the same with life. I don't consider my life ruined if I think less should be said about a woman's life being ruined if she makes one mistake."

"I am twenty-three now, surrounded by friends who believe in me, and am often spoken of as the girl who is always happy."
"Someday if I love someone who loves me I can make him just as good a wife as if this had never happened. I shall tell him. If he can't forgive me I shall be glad I told him because I shall not have deceived him, and I shall know that he does not care enough for me. I will lose him but I should have lost him anyway and far better before marriage than after."
"Please tell the little for me that I am so, so sorry it happened, but that she must make the best of it."

BILLION DOLLAR ARGUMENT IN CANADA'S FAVOR

More Than 500,000 U. S. Farmers Have Carried Belongings Worth That Across Border in Nine Years

Arthur Stringer, the Canadian author, has an article in the April issue of Hampton's Magazine, on sale March 28th, which is significant at this period, pending convening of congress to take up again the matter of reciprocity. In the article, which is headed, "If Canada Should Close Her Door to the United States," Mr. Stringer tells how an Idaho farmer walked into the office of the commissioner of immigration at Winnipeg a year ago, saying that he was a stranger in that section, and turning over to the commissioner his old wallet containing $25,000 in stock and cash and worded goods to the amount of over three thousand dollars. He knew that in that same summer, on one train crossing into Canada at North Port, settlers from the western states carried in with them two hundred and fifty thousand dollars in actual cash.

"He was also ignorant of the fact that in this same city of Winnipeg where he stood, two hundred of the larger business houses were paying their hands with money that came out of an American pocket-book. It did not greatly disturb him, for he knew that Winnipeg could take care of its own. He had seen it emerge, thirty years ago, from a little Red River fur post to a city of two hundred thousand, an asphalt paved, serviced, many park and boulevard metropolis with twenty-three chartered banks, a municipal electric power plant with a capacity of 80,000 horsepower, municipal quarries and even a municipal asphalt manufactory. He had seen it grow into the largest city in the world (even in 1909 it had 'inspected' over eighty-eight million bushels), and such being the case, he regarded it as only natural that this same city had, during that same summer, shipped six hundred steam plows into the colony of Canadianized American farmers, to be used in breaking the virgin prairie. Each one of those plows was able to clear an adjoining lot, late on barley. The large bell was, therefore, hung on the stately tree and a hole for the bell rope made in the roof of the building.

"The limit of a huge aim, extending over the roof of the Protestant Episcopal church of the Epiphany in Philadelphia is being such support, the world bell, the building being used by the church, pending the erection of a large edifice on an adjoining lot, late on barley. The large bell was, therefore, hung on the stately tree and a hole for the bell rope made in the roof of the building.

"He was also ignorant of the fact that in this same city of Winnipeg where he stood, two hundred of the larger business houses were paying their hands with money that came out of an American pocket-book. It did not greatly disturb him, for he knew that Winnipeg could take care of its own. He had seen it emerge, thirty years ago, from a little Red River fur post to a city of two hundred thousand, an asphalt paved, serviced, many park and boulevard metropolis with twenty-three chartered banks, a municipal electric power plant with a capacity of 80,000 horsepower, municipal quarries and even a municipal asphalt manufactory. Each one of those plows was able to clear an adjoining lot, late on barley. The large bell was, therefore, hung on the stately tree and a hole for the bell rope made in the roof of the building.

"He knew many other things, for it was his business to do so. He knew why the Americans were coming into Canada, and he knew the nature of the country into which they were coming, the possible wheat belt of what the rest of America had been wont to regard as 'The Frozen Zone,' aggregated an area of one hundred and eighty million acres. Of that great area only a little over six million acres are now actually under cultivation. The great remainder lies either virgin prairie hungering for the plowshare, or fertile coasts and valley lands awaiting the advent of man.

"Had any of his new-found American friends doubted this, he could have turned to his map and pointed out to them the Mackenzie Basin alone, rolling from Great Slave Lake right up to the Arctic Ocean. He could have shown that this vast watershed, second only in magnitude to that of the Mississippi itself, was made up of one million, one hundred and twenty thousand square miles, constituting a country about nine times the size of England and Ireland.

"This is what the Canadian senate committee reported, after scientific examination. Within the scope of the committee's inquiry there is a possible area of 650,000 square miles fitted for the growth of potatoes, 407,000 square miles suitable for barley, and 816,000 square miles suitable for wheat. There is a pastoral area of 880,000 square miles, 26,000 of which is open prairie with occasional groves, the remainder being more or less wooded. Japanese ashees are worn with Parisian frocks.

"I use Baby's Own Soap every day and my skin is delightfully soft, white and smooth, and my complexion is beautifully clear." It is impossible to make a better soap than "Baby's Own"

But get "Baby's Own" and do not accept any soap that only resembles it and which is made as cheaply as possible to look as nearly like "Baby's Own" as the law permits.

BELIEVES SECRET OF GROWTH IS FOUND

Professor of Royal College of Surgeons in London Says It is in Fair Way to be Realized

London, March 28—Once more has a writer of romances anticipated the scientists. H. G. Wells's "Food for Gods," which produced a race of giants, seems in a fair way to be realized, according to Professor Arthur Keith, of the Royal College of Surgeons, whose recent lecture on the fossil remains of man attracted much attention. In a lecture at the Royal Institution the professor encouraged the belief that the secret of growth had been discovered.
"So far," he said, "we have only unlocked the door of the unknown. We do not know exactly what the room will contain when we enter it, but we think that when we have done that we shall have the means of regulating the size and stature of the body at will. Modern research has proved that the growth of a giant is due to a diseased condition of the pituitary body at the base of the skull. It is a little thing, which would not fill a teaspoon. It is smaller than a grape, and yet we know it to be a thing of very great importance. It was discovered by a French physician, Pierre Marie, who found also that in case of abnormal growth found also that in case of abnormal growth
