FOUGHT FIRE WITH MILK.

Bucket Brigade Worked Hard to Save Reeve Pullin's House.

WOODSTOCK, June 5.—The fine brick residence of Reeve Wm. Pullin, of West Oxford township, at Folders's Corner, was badly damaged by fire this morning early. Fire, caught from an oil lamp in the kitchen and spread very rapidly. Neighbors and men from the cheese factory nearby came quickly and the flames were energetically fought by a bucket brigade, using water, milk and yeast as materials. The whole interior of the house was burned out and most of the furniture was destroyed, but the services of the volunteer brigade prevented total destruction. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

SHE DIDN'T ACCEPT.

A little episode once greatly delighted Calve, the famous prima donna. She was being escorted over a famous grotto when she suddenly thought of an opera and burst into song, to which the boy who was her guide listened with much satisfaction. When she stopped he seriously remarked, "If you asked the proprietor whether you might sing in here while the people are being shown over I think he would pay you well." "How much do you think he would give me?" asked the prima donna, entering thoroughly into the spirit of the adventure. After thinking carefully the boy replied, "About 5 francs a day."

FARMER BROKE HIS NECK.

AUBURN, Me., June 6.—The dead body of Frank Furbush, aged 39 years, a farmer who lived alone on College Road, Lewiston, was found beside his wagon at 134th street today. The man's neck was broken and it is believed he met his death by tumbling from his wagon when alighting.

REMARKABLE MEMORIES OF SOME NOTED MEN

Morphy, the celebrated chess-player, could play several games of chess simultaneously without seeing any of the boards on which the various games were being conducted. That his brain at last gave way, and that he died insane, proves that physiology has something to say to memory.
Like every other gift, memory must be used with discretion, or else the frail frame with which the mind is associated may be shattered by over-exertion, and what has been the best may be corrupted into the worst. A wonderful genius may degenerate into an idiot.
An amusing instance is given by the old philosopher Seneca, the master and afterwards the victim, of the Emperor Nero. He told us how, on one occasion, a poet wrote a long poem, which he read before a distinguished audience.
It was received with great applause, but suddenly, to the astonishment of the audience, and to the subsequent consternation of the author, a man started up and accused the poor poet of plagiarism, declaring he had written the piece which had been greeted with such well-deserved applause.

RECITED IT BY HEART.

The claim was indignantly denied, till in proof of his assertion, the claimant recited the whole poem by heart, word for word, and defied the poet to do the same.
This he was not prepared to do, and the audience decided that the one who knew the poem, and in proof of his assertion, he recited the whole poem before, but had learned it by heart. The poet, who was only when he was divided, the poet gaining applause for his verses, the other for his memory.
A TRICK ON VOLTAIRE.
The French critic, La Motte, is said to have played the same trick on Voltaire. When quite a young author, he once brought a tragedy, which he had just composed to read over to the critic.
"It is all very beautiful," said La Motte, "but the second scene of the fourth act is copied word for word, from a previous author, and in proof of this statement, he recited every line of the scene without changing a word. Voltaire declared his hearing was not good, and he only when he saw how distressed the young author was, that La Motte acknowledged that he wrote the scene, but that it was not a word of it escaped the tenacity of his memory.
Sir Benjamin Brodie, in his memoirs, says that he stated in the life prefixed to "Physiological Inquiries," cites the instance of the celebrated Jesuit, Suarez, who is said to have known the words of the works of St. Augustine by heart. These consist of eleven large folio volumes. How far this is literally true can never be proved, but it is stated in the life prefixed to his works that if anyone ever quoted St. Augustine on any subject he would quote the quotation, and give it with perfect literal accuracy.

NEVER FORGOT ANYTHING.

The great thinker, Pascal, is said never to have forgotten anything he had ever known or read, and the same is told by Hugo, Grotius, Leibnitz, and Euler. Both know the whole of Virgil's Æneid by heart. And we have all read how the Athenian Themistocles knew the name of every one of the twenty thousand citizens of Athens.
The great critic, Joseph Scaliger, is pronounced by Sir William Hamilton to be the most learned man that the world has ever seen. His knowledge was certainly prodigious. He used to say to himself that he had a bad memory, but a good reminiscence; he could not learn by heart as fast as he could wish, but when he once knew a thing he could always recall it.
Yes, this good man with his bad memory complains that it took him twenty-one days to learn the whole of Homer by heart; he had to devote three months in learning in like manner the whole of the remaining Greek poets, and that in two years he succeeded in getting by heart the whole of the range of classical authors. And this is what he calls a bad memory!

EXTRAORDINARY FEAT.

The most extraordinary feat of memory is one which Sir William Hamilton believes to be true without doubt, cited by him from the geographer, Marietta, who witnessed it and had it solemnly attested by four Venetian noblemen.
Marietta tells us how, in Padua, he met a young Corsican who had gone hither to pursue his studies at the university.
Having heard that the young man was gifted with a most extraordinary memory, so that he could retain and repeat as many as thirty-six thousand words, which would be read over by him only once, Marietta and some distinguished friends asked if he would allow them to test the accuracy of what report had reached them.
He willingly consented, and there were read over an almost interminable list of words strung together indefinitely, after which he repeated them in their proper order.
Of course, it is impossible now to verify this fact, but Sir William Hamilton considered it true beyond question, and did not hesitate to say so in his lectures on metaphysics before the University of Edinburgh.
The French essayist, Montaigne, used to say to himself that he ought to be held in celebration for the badness of his memory. He declares that it took him a long time to learn three lines by heart. But he consoled himself with the reflection that he was always obliged to be very careful in telling the truth, because of his wretched memory.
Sir Walter Scott, in the Introduction to "Anne of Gelestan," says that he had often been complimented upon the strength of his memory, and he affirms that, though it served him in instances for which he had a fancy, it would not be easy to name the truth, because of his wretched memory.
"No, doctor," he said, "I have no command of my memory. It only tells me what hits my fancy, and, like enough, sir, if you were to preach to me for a couple of hours, I might be unable at the close of your discourse to remember a word of it."

MEANING OF DEMOCRACY IN MODERN TIMES

(By Augustine Birrell.)

The following article by Mr. Birrell was contributed to the twenty-fifth anniversary number of the New York Times.
Time was in the modern world when the word "democracy" and "democracy" struck chilly terror into the hearts of the brave men and fair women while in the ears of others equally brave it meant a word of hope and courage, a word to battle.
Today it is otherwise. For us democracy is no longer a word of hope and courage, and the only available form. We are no longer believers, or even half-believers in the word, but we have become sadly dubious.

EXPENSIVE FAILURES.

Our Churchmen, as rulers, being hopelessly discredited by the unbroken correctness of history, and military history as founders of dynasties, being proved most expensive failures, we feel we have no option but to entrust to the multitude, against whom, nevertheless, we take all the precautions we can, the choice of choosing at decent intervals of time, their legislators and administrators.
Government of some kind is an admitted necessity. Dividends must go on being paid at the banks, thieves must be arrested and sent to prison, contracts must either be enforced or damages paid for breach of them, even trade debts must be collected. The modern man expects a good deal in exchange for his rates and taxes, and if a reasonable number of adult male citizens every now and then are allowed to express their political preferences, why, then, democracy is supposed to be satisfied and nobody, not even a king or a pope or a lady of the bed-chamber, shivers in her shift, as she reads by her electric lamp, Carlyle's "History of the French Revolution."

DEMOCRACY AND LIBERTY.

Between a democratic form of government and democratic sentiments there may, however, be a great gulf. Fixed democratic sentiments are multi-form and some, it may be, thrive best under the Republic of France, or in Switzerland. Unluckily, I have never yet been in the United States, where a subtle inequality from top to bottom it is as anybody else. The true phrase, therefore, is not: "We must educate our masters," but "We must educate ourselves."

You cannot classify needs and lodge them in separate compartments—political, religious, social. We are all, as Shakespeare says, strangely woven of one piece.

THE OUTLOOK.

Where, then, do we get our ideas? From books, newspapers, music-halls, stock exchanges, workshops, drink-rooms, clubs, sermons, divorce courts, schools and universities—all contribute to the mental and moral outlook of democracies and generate and spread the ideas and notions which make men and women what they are and obtain for them the kind of government they deserve.
It is a mistake to suppose that mankind can ever get rid of authority. We are all afraid of something, be it only public opinion. We all worship something, be it only money. We all bow to somebody, be it only our favorite politician.
Not many of us can hope to verify his formulas. Our political catchwords are at least as mysterious to most of us as any of our creeds. Great, as they are, small leaders will continue to sway our minds, form our opinions, and command our votes. It cannot be otherwise, nor need we wish it to be otherwise.

SALT, PLEASE.

"Some people," said our friend, "consider the snake as dull, but they're wrong. For instance, once when I was in India I saw a Hindoo mother place her year-old babe outside the hut to sun himself, and she gave the little chap a big feeding-bottle of milk. Well, as I watched I saw a snake crawl up to that child. My heart was in my mouth, but, bless you, the snake was only after the milk! He just slipped the teat out of the child's mouth into his own, and then the kindly reptile put the end of his tail into the child's mouth!" With a great sob the president of the society arose, and handed the laurel to the snake story man, and then the members passed silently into the night.

If "bravity" be the soul of wit," It certainly is funny. That we don't think it droll a bit is only because we are short of money.
