The officials of the shipping office kindly interested themselves in obtaining vessels in which some ten of the above worked their passages home.

Of those partially assisted home, one case was that of a widow and family, who having lost their means of support, were anxious to get home to their friends; another case, a former commissariat officer, so much reduced by drink as to be in danger of perishing in the streets; a third was a family consisting of a man named Hebbens, his wife, and child, desiring aid, who had wandered together over the greater part of Canada on foot in search of work, and were in a terrible plight. We contributed $20 in this case, and the balance was made up by subscription. Then there was a boy too sickly to live in this country, and three distressed seamen recommended to us by Capt. Russell, Shipping Master, to be sent home at reduced fare.

Among those getting weekly or monthly allowances was one family in deep distress, owing to the illness of one of its members, and the father being out of work. Our aid was very timely.

John Dore, native of England, aged 60 years, was buried in our lot on 6th April, and an infant child of Joshua Spicer, on the 1st October.
