

"But I suppose we've got to forget him, and be happy."

"We can't help being happy," said Marie, as a hand reached hers across the table. "And think! In all the future no nation will ever enslave another again, no nation will ever become too strong."

"At least, let us hope," assented Purdy.

THE END