CONSPIRING WITH CUPID

By Epe W. Sargent

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

As all Branscome had decided that Charles Schermerhorn was the fit and proper mate for Mabel Howard, that independent young woman properly decided to transfer her somewhat unsettled affections to Frank Caswell. Branscome folks pointed out that Schermerhorn had been her girlhood's sweetheart, was now well to do, and their union would crown a very pretty little romance.

On the other hand, Caswell was practically a newcomer in the village, having made his advent two years before, when Branscome arrived at the dignity of supporting a national bank. The directors had brought him up from the city to act as receiving teller and to teach the Branscome boys how to conduct a bank. He had proceeded to make himself generally liked, and the only thing that could be urged against him was that his very evident fondness for Mabel Howard threatened to destroy a Branscome romance.

Oddly enough, Caswell and Schermerhorn were the closest of friends. Despite dire predictions of personal encounters nothing marred the course of their friendship, and Schermerhorn seemed to find very satisfying consolation in the company of Grace Payne, Caswell's half sister, who kept house for him.

So matters stood when Anabel McPherson decided to give a Halloween party. Miss McPherson, known as Anabel to the entire village, was old Captain McPherson's daughter, and inheriting her father's estate, she had become the richest woman in the village. Much given to novel reading, Miss Anabel had never married, fearful that each suitor was seeking her fortune rather than her hand. At forty-two she was still a single and by no means unattractive woman, with a kindly heart and a head filled with romantic views from a window that had just been raised and a moment later someone opened the door in the hall to admit a gust of icy air, and the flames flickered perilously. With a shriek Miss Anabel rushed to close the window, but, as the heavy sash dropped with a bang, an excited clamor arose at the table and she heard with sudden contraction of the heart some one laughingly announce "Caswell wins!"

She made her way to the table, and there, still burning brightly, but almost consumed, was the candle she had named for Frank, while a smoking wick crowned a full inch of wax on the other.

In an instant a babel of talk arose, and under cover of the excitement poor Miss Anabel stole over to the window seat to get the better of her disappointment.

The quartet whose love affairs were shaking possibly little Branscome to its very foundations walked home slowly in the crisp autumn moonlight. Caswell bent fondly above Mabel's drooping head.

"I have a confession to make," he said. "It may not have been quite fair, but when that draft came I shielded my candle."

Mabel laughed nervously, and her voice was low and uncertain. "I—I guess I wasn't quite fair either, but I don't want to hear Miss Anabel marrying me off according to her yellow backed novels, and—I blew out Charlie's candle."

A deep chuckle interrupted their mutual confessions. Schermerhorn's rich, wholesome tones announced: "Let the good work go on. When I saw things were going against you, Frank, I opened the window, hoping to blow out both candles and stop the nonsense entirely."

"And I?" chimed in Grace Payne, laughing. "Well, I opened the door to help on the draft. It wouldn't do to let the Halloween sprites confirm the decision of Branscome in pairing us off. Poor Miss Anabel! And I believe she did it all on purpose."

"Never mind," said Schermerhorn cheerily. "She shall be bridesmaid or maid of honor or anything you girls like when the wedding comes off, for, really, she brought matters to a climax."

And he patted Grace's little hand, snuggling against his great arm, while Frank Caswell and Mabel disappeared within the portals of the Howard home.

Candy For the Theater.

Mrs. Smythe never eats candy, yet when she got ready to go to the theater she bought a box of mixed chocolates.

"Why are you taking that along?" asked her neighbor in the adjoining flat, who knew Mrs. Smythe's unnatural antipathy for sweets.

"For Mr. Smythe to nibble at," was the reply. "He will eat half a boxful before the play is out."

"How funny!" said the neighbor. "I didn't know that men were given to eating candy in the theater."

"That just shows that you don't go very often yourself or else fail to make good use of your eyes while there," Mrs. Smythe retorted. "Since Mr. Smythe developed such an appetite for sweets I have been watching other men, and I find that of the couples who go to the theater provided with a box of candy the man eats three chocolates to the woman's one. There is a chance that that one sided arrangement is partly due to the woman's fear of getting her gloves soiled by digging into the candy box, but I take it to mean that men eat more candy when in a theater than women do simply because they like it better."—New York Times.

Ochiltree's Ready Wit.

On the day of Grover Cleveland's first inauguration in Washington Thomas P. Ochiltree took a cab to go to the capital. The driver was drunk, and the horse ran away. Tom was thrown on and so severely injured that he was on crutches for more than a year. He sued the Pennsylvania Railroad company, which owned the cab, for $20,000 damages. His friends jealously insisted that he would cling to those crutches until the suit was decided. Meanwhile he went to a Clover club dinner in Philadelphia, and being called on to speak, arose to respond with no crutches in sight. As soon as he uttered the words "Mr. President," Mr. Postlethwaite of the Pennsylvania railroad, one of the brightest fellows in the club, sang out, "Colonel Ochiltree, where are your crutches?" It was enough to floor most men, but Tom was equal to the emergency. Quick as a flash came this answer: "Under the table, sir, where you will be in a few minutes." Mr. Postlethwaite joined as heartily as any body in the laugh following this knockdown blow.

The Panacea of Nature.

Every great and commanding moment in the annals of the world is the triumph of some enthusiasm. The victories of the Arabs after Mohammed, who in a few years from a small and mean beginning established a larger empire than that of Rome, is an example. But there will dawn ere long on our politics, on our modes of living, a nobler morning than that Arabian faith in the sentiment of love. This is the one remedy for all ills, the panacea of nature. We must be lovers, and at once the impossible becomes possible. Our age and history for these thousand years have not been the history of kindness, but of selfishness. Our distrust is very expensive. We make by distrust the thief and burglar and incendiary, and by our court and jail we keep him so. An acceptance of the sentiment of love throughout Christendom for a season would bring the felon and the outcast to our side in tears, with the devotion of his faculties to our service.—Emerson.
