death by drowning, but no reports have been received of any little boy missing. The body evidently had been washed by the river over on the flats, where it remained when the river subsided. The little fellow was exceedingly well dressed. The scene of the discovery is the well-known property known as the Col. Dickie farm. As to how long the little fellow had been dead the police were not informed. It is believed, however, that he was drowned several days ago. The case is of a most unusual nature, as no reports of any child being missing have been received locally.
