The Romance of Lighthouses .

N these days of darkened coast lines, danger zones, and forbidden seas, the lighthouse, in many cases, is having a very unwanted rest, for, if there is one thing specially notable about a lighthouse, it is that it must never be off duty. Many, indeed, of the most remarkable stories, whether fact or fiction, connected with them have been bound up with determination of the keeper never to fail in the lighting of FOR SALE—Desirable building lot his lamps. And so the longshore-Size 35x82. Centrally located, man, far away, at sea, counts on the R|45 lights appearing at the appointed hour, and they have a common bond in the white or red shaft, which from Egypt, many centuries before the Christian era, great fires were lighted and kept replenished by the priests.

And so it was for 2,000 years or or and many of them are still to be found up and down the world to-day. They were often wonderful structures. The tales, for instance, that are told of the famous Pharos of Alexandria, built by Sostratus of Cnidus in the reign of Ptolemy II. would make the structure a serious competitor with the Eiffel Tower. No less than 600 feet in height, it was, for more than 1,400 years, re
