Paine's Celery Compound

Has Wrought Thousands of Cures After Failures of Thousands

To-day kidney disease is as commo as rheumatism. Thousands of men living in fancied security, have kidney trouble in some form that must develop from day to day and end in death, unless wise and proper treat-ment is at once taken advantage of.

Have you any of the following sumptoms; headache, frequent urinating, fluttering of the heart, nausea, vomititing, a dry, harsh skin, fever, coated iting, a dry, harsh skin, fever, coated tongue, extreme thirst, fickle appetite, acid bitter taste, deposit of mucous after urinating, sour stomach, dropsical swelling, loss of memory, scalding sensations and constipation? If you experience any of these symptoms, begin at once with Paine's Celery Company which will enjoy to the light pound, which will quickly put to flight all symptoms of disordered kidneys.

It is nature's true remedy, the only one you can rely upon with certainty to cure. Mr. M. Maher, Hairdresser, of St. John's Nfld., gratefully writes "I suffered terribly for two years ters, Solicitors of the Supreme from kidney trouble and dyspepsia. > Solar Spectrum and Seasons. Writing of the recent observations made by himself and others on that part of the solar spectrum which lies beyond the red end of the ordinary prismatic, or visible, spectrum and contains about four-fifths of the radiant energy of the sun, Professor S. P. Langley says that we are beginning to see that the seasons, "which write their coming upon the records of the spectrum," may, in the future, have their effects upon the crops foretold by means somewhat similar to the forecasts made day by day by the weather bureau, but in ways infinitely more farreaching, and that these pre-

The Monkey as a Labore One of the English astronomers, Mr. J. J. Atkinson, who visited Sumatra to observe the total solar eclipse last May, made the acquaintance of an old Malay, living on a little island near the Sumatran coast, who owned a large monkey which he had trained to work for him in gathering cocoanuts. The monkey's business was to climb the gigantic cocoanut palms and throw down the nuts, "which he did," says Mr. Atkinson, "in the most artistic manner by screwing the nuts off with his powerful arms while he hung by his legs 70 to 100 feet from the ground."

It was a wind driven rain, and he lowered the umbrella on her side to ward off the great slanting drops. She felt a novel sensation of being shelter ed, and a sob rose in her throat. Once she slipped, and he caught her arm. She had slipped so many times before but no one had tried to save her. That was why she straightened her slender

One wet block and half of another they traversed before either spoke again. Then it was the man. "I'd ought to introduce myself, I guess," he said awkwardly. "I'm Luke Dolliver."

"I'm Faith Pettie," was the response "Faith. That's a nice soundin' name, he murmured.

Faith looked shyly. "I've always thought it dreadfully old fashioned, but I didn't mind because it was grandmother's name." "Then you've got folks, eh? Why, shouldn't know how that felt."

"I did have. I haven't any now. There aren't any left."

The catch in her low voice seemed to trouble Luke. He changed the topic.

"What d'you say your last name was, "Pettie-Faith Pettie," she answered. He was looking down kindly into her small, pale, but rather sweet face.

"H'm! I reckon they forgot to put the 'r' in it." "What 'r?" Her puzzled innocen made him laugh in a big, healthy way. Faith laughed, too, involuntarily. They were passing a long row of tenements that toed the pavement in dreamy suc-cession. Faith stopped before one midway in the row. "This ain't your home, is it?" the big man asked, eying the structure with evident disfavor.

"No: it's where I stop." Faith an swered quietly, conscious that she blushed under his frank gaze. It was a graceless house, and she wished that her room was in front, so he could see the pot of red geraniums and the white curtain which helped out some. At the front door they both stopped, and Faith looked up at him shyly.

"I'm ever so much obliged, Mr .-"Dolliver, Dolliver; but you just say 'Luke.' I work down at Weymouth's factory. Everybody calls me Luke." He held the umbrella above her care fully till she mounted the steps and stood in the slit of a doorway. Then he closed it promptly.

"Well, I declare if it ain't stoppe rainin'!" he cried. "Now, when did

In the spring twilights which followed, these two workers met, at first as if by chance and then as if by mutual attraction. They loitered on their way me from work, and the girl grew less lonely, while the man came to count on throwing aside his troubles for the short time they walked together. Moreover, he became ambitious to make her smile in return. The rare occasion when he suggested that they pass beyond the tenement and sit on the benches in the promenade and watch the sunset on the water Faith marked as red letter days on her calendar. It did not occur to honest, big Luke Dolliver that danger lurked in these quiet moments. The mite of a woman who sat beside him looked happy—he liked to make her quiet face brighten. Nor did it occur to Faith that she loved graduated his great pace to here or talked quietly to her on the promearly country life, the death of the folks and her efforts to earn her livelibood in the great city, but Luke Dol-

if colorless, was enviable as compared

Spring crept into summer before they knew it, and they began to watch the gay boat parties from the promenade.
"I never was out on the water in my life," Faith said idly one evening.
"And I never really 'holidayed.' I don't call days off 'holidaying,' do you?" "My fix, too," answered Luke. "Days off ain't the right kind. We'd ought to try our hand at the genuine article, Faith's face kindled with gentle ex-"There's going to be an excursion down the river next Saturday. I heard the girls talking about it at noon. They're going. There's to be a band "Then you an' me'll go, mite of a one." There had been a slight hesitation, but he could not disappoint the childish eagerness in her pale face. The delight in Faith's eyes repaid him for the invitation and they sat later when they were turned. Saturday's skies could not have been bluer or the air cooler and sweeter. Faith met the day with such a radiant face that Luke Dolliver regarded her with astonished satisfaction. He had never noticed before how blue her eyes were in their white setting nor how the elusive dimples played at hide and seek in her small round chin.

"You little mite of a one," he cried gleefully, "what you been doin' to yourself? I'd ought to have put on my white duck trousers an' boiled shirt!" For reply Faith stood on tiptoe and pinned a tiny banch of pinks on the lapel of his coarse brown coat. Her fingers shook with excitement, and an expression of pain contracted Luke Dolliver's face. He looked about him uneasily. Yes, he would leave herthere among the pleasure seekers. He could make some excuse. She would not mind, and he'd leave the ticket and go and never come back.

These thoughts tormented Luke as they went on-the sudden consciousness that he was wronging the girl in sharing the day's pleasure with her. He had meant it to be only a bright spot in her dull life. Now he suddenly recalled the barrier that separated him worldwide from Faith. The stream of people bound for the wharf thickened. A showily dressed woman between two men stared at them and openly jeered. She nudged her companion, and the three burst into loud laughter.

"Hold on, little mite of a one. Don't burry so," Luke muttered, shutting an oath behind his teeth. "There's a-plenty of time." He could not bear to have Faith see the impudent, handsome face. He had not seen it himself for many a day.

"No, no; we must hurry! Oh, Luke, if we should be late!" cried Faith anx-She had never called him Luke fore. His half formed purpose to turn back vanished. "Lord have mercy, I love the little mite of a one?" grouned the man in his heart. Hours later on the homeward trip he discovered that Faith loved him. They were sitting alone in a corner of the deck, and he read it clearly in her pure upturned face. To draw her close and hold her so forever! How easy a thing it would be! And what did all the rest of the world matter? He saw how thin her arm was where the lace fell away, the peak of her chin and the hollows in her temples. How frail and slight she was to ear her bread alone! The thought set his pulses beating mutinously. "Lord have mercy! Lord have merey!" his soul prayed for him. The steamer neared its landing place and the shrill voiced throng crowded toward the gangplank. The man and girl were in a zone of silence. He was eying the shore line, creeping nearer and nearer, with his lips set to grim lines. He was fighting a sharp battle. He had given himself till the steamer was the face of a free man. Yet if only he were sure he had decided that question before the accident happened! Yet could be have decided it wrongly? "You poor little mite of a one," he cried tenderly, "you look scared to death! It's all over. Three people got hurt, but they're—better now." She
