

A WOMAN'S BACK IS THE MAINSPRING OF HER PHYSICAL SYSTEM.

The Slightest Back-ache, if Neglected, is Liable to Cause Years of Terrible Suffering.

No woman can be strong and healthy unless the kidneys are well and regular in their action. When the kidneys are ill, the whole body is ill, for the poisons which the kidneys ought to have filtered out of the blood are left in the system.

The female constitution is naturally more subject to kidney disease than a man's, and what is more, a woman's work is never done—her whole life is one continuous strain.

How many women have you heard say: "My back aches!" Do you know that backache is one of the first signs of kidney trouble? It is, and should be attended to immediately. Other symptoms are frequent thirst, scanty, thick, cloudy or highly colored urine, burning sensation when urinating, frequent urination, puffing under the eyes, swelling of the feet and ankles, floating specks before the eyes, etc.

These symptoms if not taken in time and cured at once, will lead to a terrible kidney suffering. All these symptoms, and in fact, these diseases may be cured by the use of

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

WHEN A MALAY WEDS

REMARKABLE FESTIVITIES DESCRIBED BY ENGLISH VISITOR.

Actual Wedding Day Preceded By Week of Nightly Feasting—Affair Ends With Ceremonial Bathing Supposed to Avert Ill Luck.

A week of nightly festivities generally precedes the actual wedding day and in the case of a rajah two months of festivity may follow it. In Singapore, where cosmopolitanism has infected everything, the guests will be invited to feed one night on a white man's fare and yet another on a white man's fare, with their fingers; the bride will appear one night in an English gown, the next as a Chinese lady and then gray robed, gay shashed, as a Malay girl; the bridegroom will be driven around town in a buggy. But these corruptions have hardly as yet crept in, there will be only the decorations of houses with curtains and flowers, feasting, the staining of the feet red with palm oil, and a performance without magic import and borrowed from the Arabs whose ladies consider fingers so colored beautiful and always affect the henna dye; and there will be the brushing of forehead and hands with rice paste, which forms an indispensable ingredient of the medicine man's pot and which is used on so many occasions to avert ill luck. This is preliminary.

Finally the morning before the wedding, which is the essential lay part of the wedding and the part I was to see the legal and religious rite is performed, a kind of registry office business where the dowry is put over, conducted by the kathi, or Mohammedan priest, and in the absence of bride and groom folk. The sword dance by the two Patanis finished, the bridegroom was escorted away, and the people turned to be present by invitation to a Malay dinner at the rajah's house and the subsequent marriage ceremony. The wedding procession collected at the dining room and at 9 o'clock the wedding procession started to the house of the bride. In the afternoon the marriage ceremony took place, and at 4 o'clock the bride and groom were seated at a table, and the bridegroom, dressed in his holiday silks and escorted by his friends, went over to the bride's house where he has to live while under the eyes of his mother-in-law. There he changed his attire for the shabby clothes that are always reserved for abstinence and with a towel over his shoulders, passed into the inner room where the newly wedded bride, also dressed in old clothes, awaited his coming. Amid the buzzing, clattering and laughing of the mothers of the kampong pair grasp each other and the bridegroom, and so united march out into the passage. The narrow passage with the split bamboo floor is crowded with excited women, and every one except the mated victims is laughing and talking. They, poor devils, sit down, turn down faces, dumb, motionless, walking, sitting, standing, not of their own accord, but mechanically and under the compulsion of eager hands.

Bowl after bowl of water is poured over the bedraggled pair, strained through the coconut fronds and the cloth. The milk of the young coconut is emptied after it. The coconut shoots and cloth are soaked and dripping. Two women continue to drench the couple, but for the sheer comedy enacted by the rest I had not been prepared, though I had expected something from seeing my friend the rajah doff his official European head for something less elaborate than his silks yesterday. I was soon to learn. The excited women having finished with the victims in chief, turned their attention to the audience and vented their feelings by dousing every one within reach, the rajah and myself included. We could only retort within ineffectual handfuls, while they were of practiced arm and equipped with basins. However, fortune favored us. Often bamboo squirts, salted or pepper water or cold water are employed. The women lead the bride away for a fresh toilet. The groom dons his silks again and waits, no short time, in the passage till his spouse shall have had her toilet completed to the satisfaction of the matrons. Once more the bridegroom is ushered inside, and he and his bride are seated side by side, as on the previous evening. The nasi damil or rice of accord is brought in and placed on the floor, which they taste it. The circle of women indulging the while a piquant reflections on the married state and the newly married couple in particular. An old lath woman is galvanized into grotesque activity, clapping her hands and chuckling in a gruff voice. The audience shriek with laughter, their attention diverted for a moment from the embarrassed pair.

The wedding is over. It only remains for the bride and bridegroom to sembah or lift folded palms to brow in salutation of the rajah, who has honored them by his presence and provided entertainment for their bridal—Temple Bar.

The Magic Mirror. The "magic mirror" of Japan is a disk of bronze, usually from six inches to eight inches in diameter. It is silvered on the front, which is a little convex, and there is a raised pattern on the back which is rather concave. The polished pattern is generally a landscape, flowers, animals or Chinese characters. This is not visible to the front of the mirror, but when strong sunlight is reflected from the front of the mirror to a wall or screen the pattern of the back is visible on the screen in bright lines on a black ground. The true scientific explanation of this magical effect seems to be that the design on the back alters the convexity of the front, making it flat along the lines of the pattern, so that the light reflected from the front is not dispersed at these points of the design, and they appear brighter on the screen.

POLICEMEN PARENTS.

Love is the Greatest Educator of Youth, Indeed the Principal Factor That Will Develop a Child.

A great many parents use the police method of government with their children, writes Orison Sweet Marden, in Success. Force is the only method of governing they know. They have never learned to lead. They only know how to drive.

In many a home the father is looked upon more as a stern policeman, a severe judge, or a hard taskmaster, than as a fond parent. The children feel a sense of relief when he leaves home in the morning and have a dread of his return. Instead of waiting for his homecoming as a playfellow who will enter into their sports, romp and play with them, sympathize with them in their little troubles and ambitions, take an interest in their toys and every thing that interests them, they shrink from him, they fear him. His presence throws a gloomy shadow upon them. When they see him coming they hush their laughter and stop their romping play and merry games.

Children who are continually repressed in this unnatural way are usually timid and full of fear. They lose the sweet, open confidence and trustfulness which constitute the greatest charm of childhood. They become hard, cold, secretive and suspicious. The joy and gladness and spontaneity which are as natural to the young as beauty and perfume to the flowers are crushed out of them by harsh, repressive measures. They become like fruit grown in the shade—pungent, bitter, unlovely in every way.

Love is the great educator, the great unfold of youth. As the sun is the only thing that will bring out the sweet juices and develop the luscious flavor, the exquisite beauty and tint of fruits and flowers, so love is the only thing that will develop the sweetness and beauty of the child. It is the only power that will call out the true, the natural, the responsive, the spontaneous, the beautiful side of its nature. It is only the hard, coarse and unlovely qualities that are developed by force and repression.

When the Lawyer Came

By CARL DAY

Copyright, 1905, by E. S. McClure

The village of Hillsdale, containing 400 inhabitants, had a grocery, a post-office, a cooper shop, a blacksmith shop and a sawmill, but when any of its people visited other towns they didn't brag of these things. If they boasted at all it was of the fact that the village never had had a lawyer or a lawsuit.

Now and then differences of opinion arose among the villagers, and they always went to old Silas Warner to settle them. He was the "father" of the village. When he said it was going to be a hard winter or a hot summer, or one thought of doubting his word. He was ready with advice to old and young, and no one knew him to say a bad word about anybody. He would hear both sides of a story and then decide according to his judgment, and it was seldom that his decision was appealed from or created hard feelings.

Uncle Silas had been fathering Hillsdale for twenty years when an event happened. A boom struck the town. Some one sold his house and lot, the cooper got an order for a hundred barrels all at once, and it was discovered that the water of a spring emptying into the mill pond was good for some thing else. It wouldn't have been called much of a boom in Kansas, but it was enough to make them hold their breath in Hillsdale, and it led to results. One of the results was a move to get a lawyer to come there and open an office.

"I ain't goin' to say yes nor no to it," Uncle Silas said when he heard of it, "but if we get a lawyer here we can look out for mumps and measles to follow."

The lawyer came. He was an object of curiosity for the first two weeks, and then he was an object of something else. To do him justice, he was no pettifogger to set neighbors by the ears, but the fact that there was a lawyer in town to be consulted had an influence with the villagers, and soon most of them discovered chips on their shoulders.

The cooper had a plot of ground on which he always raised about fifty bushels of potatoes. The sawmill had six or eight hogs running at large that always managed to get in among the potatoes and reduce the crop by half. Hereafter this matter had been carried to Uncle Silas for arbitration. He had taken a couple of days to think it over and then said:

"Waal, nayburs, hogs is hogs, and taters is taters, and it's mighty hard to keep 'em apart. Fact is, hogs have got to have 'em. I can't say that it was anybody's fault in this case, but I guess if the owner of the hogs pays the owner of the taters about a dollar, and a half no one will be the wiser off."

One day the sawmill man got a letter from the lawyer demanding $10 damages because his hogs had made their annual raid on the potato patch of the cooper.

"Yes, Joe," said the cooper when his neighbor came to see him, "I told the lawyer to write you that letter. It's your own fault. You've got to pay me $10 this time."

"But you owe me $7 for lumber, Jim."

"Then sue for it."

"Hanged if I don't! I'll show you that I can start just as many lawsuits as you can."

For ten years people had been in the habit of taking a short cut across Joe Smith's lots when going to the postoffice, and Jabez had no more of thought of complaining than he had of fying. All of a sudden, however, he put up signs of "No Trespass," and when the Widow Thompson didn't heed them he came outside his gate to meet her.

"See here, widder," he began, "you either keep off my land or I'll have you up for damages!"

"What's the matter of you?" she asked in surprise.

"Waal, I've been picked on and picked on for the last ten years, and I've come to it just as long as I'm goin' to. We've got a lawyer in the town now, you know."

"Then you keep your hens out of my garden or you'll hear from that lawyer! I allow thought you'd been pizen mean if you had a chance, and now I know it."

"Don't use violent language, widder, or the law will make you suffer for it!"

Horses, cattle and hogs always had been allowed to run at large in Hillsdale, and the citizens were supposed to protect themselves by keeping their fences in repair and their gates shut. It was not long after the arrival of the lawyer that a dozen different neighbors were shaking their fists at each other and threatening lawsuits for damages done. In the long before, Jonas Bebes had given the village the privilege of digging gravel at his banks to fill in the mudholes of the three or four streets. There was no sale for it at any price, and the more they dug away his hills the better for his property, but one day Jonas rose up at the postoffice to speak.

I've made a fool of myself by giving the town about a thousand dollars' worth, but it stops right here!"

When one of the fifty hogs running at large got under the front steps of Skinner's grocery in the daytime and grunted away it was Skinner's privilege to rouse him out with a pole and then hit him with as many clubs as he could. This had come to be considered a constitutional privilege, but Skinner was to have his eyes opened. One day, after having enjoyed himself with a stray hog, the owner of it came along and stopped before the store.

"By thunder, Skinner," he cried, "if you ever tech that hog o' mine ag'in I'll give you a lawsuit bigger'n a house!"

"W-h-a-t?" shouted the greaser as he opened his mouth and eyes in astonishment.

"Then you for damages and then have you tried for cruelty to animals. I want you to understand that there is such a thing as law in this town now."

"Jim, do you mean it?"

"Of course I mean it."

"Then I want you to pay up what you owe."

A dozen families in Hillsdale had family wells—that is, wells sunk on the dividing line and used by two families. No one ever had heard of any trouble on this account, but the lawyer hadn't been in the village a month when there was trouble enough over the wells alone to keep him busy for days. People charged each other with drawing more than their share of the water and with damaging the pump or bucket, and hot words always led to a threat to begin a lawsuit.

It was four miles to the nearest justice of the peace, but within three months of the lawyer's coming he had seven lawsuits to his credit and double that number on the way. Every one who had one suit seemed to ache for another, and the party who was beaten was prompt to take an appeal.

The crisis came when Uncle Jerry Thomas, one of the most peaceful men in the world, suddenly decided that the Baptist church, which had bought a place of land from him, had cheated him and should be sued for a greater price. That took in everybody who hadn't any lawsuit on hand, and Hillsdale was preparing for a fresh campaign when the lawyer suddenly disappeared. His lawbooks and his furniture were removed at night, and no one knew of his going until next day. Then somebody went up to his office to see about a suit and found this notice tacked on the door:

Notice—Gone for good. No matter where. All suits dropped. Don't owe anybody anything, but I happen to be a lawyer with a conscience. Cut out the law and go back to the old way.

And everybody shook hands with everybody else and begged pardon and said he was sorry and wouldn't do it again.

Mapleson's Ruin. The operative manager, was on a tour in Dublin, Miles. Sala and Anna de Belocca were in the company. On arriving at the hotel both ladies chose the best suit of rooms in each saying, "These will do for me."

"I shall have them," said Sala. "I am prima donna." "There are two prima donnas," returned Belocca, "myself and Patti." This began a furious quarrel. Mapleson went to the hotel keeper and ascertained that there were some other rooms nearly as good. He enjoined the man to declare that they were for Lady Spencer, wife of the viceroy, and stand to the statement. He then called him up and said loudly: "Both these ladies must have the best of the hotel. Where are the equally good rooms?"

"The only other ones as large are reserved for the Countess Spencer," returned the hotel keeper. "But we could see them," exclaimed both singers at once. "Oh, yes," said the man, leading the way. Belocca instantly flew upstairs past him into the suit and, locking the door in their faces, shouted through the keyhole that Lady Spencer must get on as best she could, leaving Mapleson to congratulate himself on the effect of his stratagem.

Glass Houses. There were whole streets in Tyre entirely occupied by glass works, and it is stated that the first glass houses were erected in Tyre. The glass houses of Alexandria were highly celebrated for the ingenuity and skill of their workmen and the extent of their manufactures. Layard, in writing about his discoveries among the ruins of Nineveh and Babylon, says: "In one chamber were found two entire glass bowls, with fragments of others. These are probably of the same period as the small bottle found in the ruins of the northwest palace during the previous excavations and now in the British museum. On this highly interesting relic is the name of Sargon, with his title of king of Assyria in cuneiform characters and the figure of a lion. We are therefore able to fix its date to the latter part of the seventh century B. C. It is consequently the most ancient known specimen of transparent glass."

An Improvement on "Lookout." "He's what they call a 'crow,'" said a well informed police witness at Brentford of a certain youth, explaining that a "crow" is one who stands on guard while his associates are busy robbing, to warn them of approaching police or other undesirable. The word is the result of considerable standing. In 1822, for instance, the Cornhill Magazine mentioned it as the technical term for a woman who kept such a watch for a burglar. An explanation that at once suggests itself is that this confederate is expected to "crow" or give some such warning noise, but the word may well point to some study of natural history in criminal circles. Those familiar "crows"—rooks—are accustomed to post sentinels to signal the coming of danger—London Chronicle.
