Mother Meant What She Said

"What do you think of my bread, Mother?"

"Why, these loaves look perfectly lovely. Since you have a home of your own you have become a wonderful cook. I'm getting envious, Edna. Why, I believe I like your bread and biscuits better than my own!"

"Mother, you old flatterer!"

"No! I mean it. I've really never eaten better bread than yours."

"Well now, I refuse to take all the credit. I'll let you in on the secret, Mother. I use

FRASERS BUILDING A MODEL HOTEL

Modern Structure for the Accommodation of Employees at Chatham Head.

Newcastle, N. B., April 17.—Word has been received here of the death at Ottawa last week of Mrs. John Rice, a former Newcastle lady, in her eighty-first year. Mrs. P. P. Loggie, of Loggieville, is a daughter, and William and Archibald Wright, of Newcastle, brothers of the deceased.

The ice in the river opposite town has broken away and the river is clear for about half a mile between the highway bridge and the French Fort Cove.

The construction of a model hotel for employees has been commenced at Chatham Head by the Fraser Company. The hotel, which will be built near their mill, will be modern in every detail.

New York, April 17.—Patrick Finn, a "tenderloin" cafe proprietor, and three waiters, were arrested last night in a raid on his establishment by 20 prohibition agents, who claimed they seized fifty quart and 32 pint bottles of liquor.

Finn was charged with maintaining a public nuisance. Fifty patrons of the place, who the agents alleged were being served with drinks, were subpoenaed to appear in the Federal court today.

REFERENDUM PLAN IN ONTARIO HOUSE

Cool Reception in House Due to Labor and Farmers' Differences Over It.

Toronto, April 17.—The resolution by which the Legislature will ask the Dominion Government for a referendum on the question of importing liquor, did not receive a very cheerful welcome when it was introduced Thursday. The resolution's reception was due partly to the manner in which it was introduced and partly to the fact that the Labor group is of a different opinion on temperance matters from the Farmer members.

Bothered by points raised by the Opposition, H. McCreary, North Lanark, who introduced the resolution, apparently did not beyond his depth in the matter of procedure. He was left stranded by the Government. Not a member came to his aid, and questions by Labor members, who were particularly friendly at the moment, sent him further into trouble. Eventually he was rescued by the Government, but had evidently not said all that he wanted to in connection with it.

Discussion was brief, and G. G. Halcrow, labor member for East Hamilton, moved the adjournment.

Mr. McCreary was reading from a document after reading the motion, when Hon. Thos. Crawford rose to direct the attention of the Speaker to the fact that no member could read his speech. Mr. McCreary said that he was reading from a brief leading to the resolution, which had been prepared.

"By whom?" he was asked.

The only reply was a long silence with Mr. McCreary still standing.

"Did you wish the resolution submitted, but had evidently not said all that he wanted to in connection with it."

Mr. Dewar submitted that the House was entitled to know by whom the "by whom" was prepared. There was another period of silence, which was broken by members on the opposition side saying: "Speak up, tell us."

Mr. McCreary attempted to start reading again but was jerked up short by opposition members.

"I understand that the lawyer who drafts all these amendments," he said, "is the second time we have had no lawyers," said Mr. Ferguson.

"Is it a lawyer who sits on the other side of the House or a lawyer out of the House?" asked Mr. Dewar.

"I understand on the outside of the House."

The motion went to the Speaker then, amid laughter from the House.

Karl Hohn, South Waterloo, inquired whether any time was set for moving the resolution.

"I understand the Federal House submits the referendum within three months of the time we apply for it," replied Mr. McCreary. "Is that right?"

Whereat the House smiled audibly.

"I am ashamed of some of our cabinet ministers and the stand they are taking," declared G. G. Halcrow, labor member for East Hamilton.

"What they are doing is to let the province they stand against submitting the question to the people. Now, when they find they can pass it in the Dominion, they are anxious to pass the bill."

"This should have come up as a government measure, and the government should have lived or died on the issue."

On motion of Mr. Halcrow debate on the motion was adjourned.

True Knights of Faith

"Run, Wilkins," quoth he, "and fetch me the shield."

Long were the faces of the Englishmen and broad the laugh of the cross-bowmen as the heavy mantlet was carried towards them, for there in the centre was the thick Brabant bolt driven deeply in to the wood, while there was neither sign nor trace of the cloth-yard shaft.

"By the three kings!" cried the Brabantier, "this time at least there is no gallinging which is the better weapon, or which the truer hand that in an instant order and method took the place of general confusion. Bows, steel caps, and lances were caught up from the grass. A long cordon cleared the camp of all strangers, while the main body fell into four lines with under-officers and file-leaders in front and on either hand. So they stood silent and motionless, when their leader came riding towards them, his face shining and his whole small figure swelling with the news which he bore.

"Great honor has been done to us, men," cried he, "for, of all the army, the prince has chosen us out that we should ride onwards into the lands of Spain to spy upon our enemies. Yet, as there are many of us, and as the service may not be to the liking of all, I pray that those who step forward from the ranks who have the will to follow me."

There was a little among the bowmen, but when Sir Nigel looked up at them no man stood forward from his fellows, but the four lines of men stretched unbroken, and out that Sir Nigel blinked at them in amazement, and a look of the deepest sorrow shadowed his face.

"That I should live to see the day!" he cried. "What! not one?"

"They have all stepped forward," "Ah, by Saint Paul! I see how it is with them. I could not think that they would desert me. We start at dawn tomorrow, and ye are to have horses at Sir Robert Cheney's company. Be ready, I pray ye, at early cock-crow."

A buzz of delight burst from the archers, as they broke their ranks and ran hither and thither, whooping and cheering like boys who have news of a holiday. Sir Nigel gazed after them with a smiling face, when a heavy hand fell upon his shoulder.

"What ho! my knight-errant of Twynham!" said a voice. "You are off to Elbro, I hear; and, by the holy fash of Tobias! you must take me under your banner."

"What! Sir Oliver Buttesworth?" cried Sir Nigel. "I had heard that you were come into camp, and had hoped to see you. Glad and proud shall I be to have you with me."

"I have a most particular and weighty reason for wishing to go," said the sturdy knight.

"I can well believe it," returned Sir Nigel; "I have met no man who is quicker to follow where honor leads."

"Nay, it is not for honor that I go, Nigel."

"For what then?"

"For pullets."

"Yes, for the rascal vanguard have cleared every hen from the country side. It was this very morning that Norbury, my squire, lamed his horse in riding round in quest of one, for we have a bag of trifles, and ought to eat with them. Never have I seen such locusts as this vanguard of ours. Not a pullet shall we see until we are in front of them; so I shall leave my Winchester runagates to the care of the provost-marshal, and I shall lie south with you, Nigel, with my trifles at my saddle-bow."

"Oliver, Oliver, I know you overwell," said Sir Nigel, shaking his head, and the two old soldiers rode off together to their pavilion.
